TEACHERS CONVENE

49th Annual Convention of Ontario Educational Association at Toronto

Toronto, March 30.—About five hundred teachers from all parts of the province, the advance guard of about one thousand delegates who will attend the 49th annual convention of the Ontario Educational Association, met in the university for the opening sessions yesterday. Immediately on arrival at the buildings from the trains they plunged into their various discussions on education questions without losing any time.

One of the first matters to receive a severe jolt by the educationalists was the new primer offered by the Ontario Government. It was severely attacked in a report brought in by Principal Plewes of Chatham, who censured the production for its jingling rhymes and its ignoring of the phonic method. A motion was put by the Chathamite to the following effect: "That in view of the fact that the new primer ignores the phonic system which is in common use, the Minister is requested to authorise or permit the use of a phonic primer in addition to the authorized one."

In the English and history section much feeling was expressed that the subject, English grammar, should be restored, as a subject of examination for the junior matriculation. Miss Gertrude Lawler, M.A., argued that the study of English grammar leads pupils to acquire a facile accuracy and a readiness in speaking, reading and writing; to form synthetic judgments, to reach the highest mark of attainment in personal initiation.

HEROISM OF A FIREMAN IN NEW YORK CITY

New York, March 30.—Roughly jerked out of the seat to which he had been lashed by a stout strap that snapped under the strain of it, Joseph N. White, driving Engine No. 16 in a street turned into the roughest of roads by the removal from it of its asphalt surfacing, struck the ground between his galloping horses and was trampled to death.

Worried by the loosening of the reins controlling them, the animals increased their already mad pace. The engine reeled and careered and swayed. Women and men who had seen White killed yelled and screamed hysterically. Lieut. Joseph Slowey, clinging to the rear of the lurching engine, knew other lives would be in danger unless the frenzied horses were halted.

Unhesitatingly he seized hold of a boiler that instantly blistered his hands in a terrible manner and made way over the top of the engine to the driver's seat. Several times he almost slipped, but he managed to hold on, although the harder he held the greater was the pain inflicted by the heated metal he was forced to grip.

It was at 23rd street that White was killed. At 20th street the tender overhauled the engine, just as Slowey, with his legs and hands burned, picked up the leathers death had taken out of his comrade's grasp and pulled up the panting and foaming steeds. The lieutenant was then rushed to Bellevue Hospital.

WOULD HAVE THE HISTORIES REVISED

Boston, March 30.—The delegation of Toronto school teachers now visiting here, were received at the City Hall yesterday by Mayor Fitzgerald.

In the course of his remarks, the mayor declared his belief that Canadian and American school histories should be re-written, so as to eliminate any features that would retard the development of international friendship.

Inspector Hughes, who led the teachers, took the same view, and incidentally launched a Fitzgerald presidential boom.

"Of course, you are not going to stop politically in the mayor's chair," he said to Mr. Fitzgerald. "You are going higher, and when you have reached the height of your ambition, the presidency, I hope you will appoint the members of the national commission to write the history of this continent. There are many inaccuracies and misstatements in the histories of the United States and Canada."

QUEER DOINGS OF SOLAR BODY

Chicago, March 30.—Strange eruptions have appeared on the sun according to a statement by Prof. Edwin B. Frost, director of the Yerkes Observatory at Williams Bay, Wis.

"The eruptions shoot from the surface of the sun like skyrockets," said Prof. Frost. "They are easily visible at the edge of the disc. One of them shot out to a length of 150,000 miles, as near as we could estimate. It then detached itself from the main body and sped through space, a mass of luminous gas, not dissimilar to a comte. Before it had disappeared it had reached a distance from the sun of about 250,000 miles. The eruptions are probably caused by the release of pressure on some particular spot of the sun."

VIRULENT POISONS

New York, March 30.—That the effects on the human system of the most virulent poisons may be rendered relatively harmless by a simple surgical expedient is the announcement it is expected will soon be made by the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research. So long as there is the faintest heart beat it will be possible to save any one who has taken what is now regarded as a fatal dose of strychnine, morphine, carbon monoxide, illuminating gas or kindred poisons. It is hoped that soon a method will be found by which all classes of poisons may be included.

The operation by which this wonderful saving of life may be accomplished is technically known as intratracheal insufflation. This means that through the trachea, or wind pipe, a steady supply of air is forced into the lungs. It differs from all other forms of artificial respiration in that the lungs themselves are not called upon to give any aid. As a matter of fact, a slender hollow tube forced through the wind pipe to the opening of the lungs forces the air through, while the foul air returns by pressure through the wind pipe outside the tube. The tube is either inserted through the mouth or through an aperture cut in the wind pipe.

MONTREAL HARBOR STILL ICE BLOCKED

Montreal, March 30.—The water is falling in the harbor, but there is a block in the ice a mile below the city which promises to delay the opening. The Lady Grey and Montcalm find it unsafe to come farther up the river than where they are, 16 miles below Sorel, till they have cut a channel of the full width. Monday the Lady Grey cut a square mile of solid ice and broke it up.

CHILD ACTOR WAS HURT AT BRANTFORD

Brantford, March 30.—At the Gem Theatre here yesterday afternoon, with a crowded house present, one of the pair of Rasmussen children, aged four and five years, while doing an act of sliding down from the rear of the hall to the stage, suspended on a rope by her teeth, fell on an empty seat just in front of the stage and was seriously injured. The rope had broken.

He was taken to the hospital where an operation was performed, as he had lost control of both legs, but Dr. McGuire announced last night that his back had been broken, and that his case is hopeless.

AN ALDERMAN AT KINGSTON RESIGNS

Craig, chairman of the waterworks committee, has tendered his resignation to the council. The water department was putting money by for contingencies.

IS ONLY PRETENCE

Asquith Declares That Veto of House of Lords Must go—The Premier's Speech.

London, March 30.—The House of Commons reassembled yesterday after the Easter recess, and the first business before the House was the consideration of the Prime Minister's resolution in regard to the veto power of the House of Lords. The House was crowded, and there was a full attendance of members. The three resolutions which the Prime Minister laid on the table on March 21 declare in effect:—

First.—That it is expedient that the House of Lords be disabled by law from rejecting or amending a money bill, but that any such limitation shall not be taken to diminish or quality the existing rights of the House of Commons.

Second.—That it is expedient that the powers of the House of Lords over bills other than money bills be restricted by law, so that any such bill which has passed the House of Commons in three successive sessions and has been rejected by the House of Lords in each of these sessions shall become a law without the consent of the House of Lords, on royal assent being declared; provided that at least two years have elapsed between the date of the first reading of th bill in the Commons and the date when it passes the Commons for the third time.

Third.—That the duration of each Parliament shall be five years.

The Primes Minister was greeted with cheers from the Government benches when he arose and moved that the House immediately resolve itself into committee to consider the relations between the two Houses of Parliament and the question of the furation of each Parliament.

Great Britain should continue to have two Legislative Chambers. There were both room and need for a second Chamber. At present, the Premier declared, there was a bi-cameral system only in name. The House of Lords was a frankly partisan assembly, it was always ready to pass the bills of one party and reject the main bills of another party.

He, the Premier, for one would rather live under the absolute autocracy of an elected single Chamber than have super-added to it this simulacrum of a second Chamber.

In reference to the constitution of the second Chamber, Mr. Asquith said it must be relatively small in numbers, and must rest upon a democratic and not on a hereditary basis. It must not be governed by partisanship tempered with panic, but must be responsive to and dependent upon the will of the nation. The resolutions he would move later, the Premier said, were not put forward, as the first solution of the problem. The Government must first prevent a repetition of the unconstitutional raid of last year into the domain of finance. The only way in which the constitution provided for the will of the House of Commons being accepted by the House of Lords was by the creation of peers, and that weapon was not appropriate.

TWO THOUSAND WATCHES STOLEN

Boston, March 30.—The biggest theft of watches reported in many years has just become known in this city by the Waltham Watch Co.'s announcement that 2,000 of its watches, valued at $20,000, were stolen from a pier in New York last Wednesday while waiting shipment to London on the steamer Campania.

COAL IS LATEST

Extensive Fields Are Reported Along Metagama River—Prospectors Are Rushing In

North Bay, Ont., March 30.—Coal is now the magic word which is stirring Northern Ontario into activity, and temporarily, at least, obscuring the alluring gleams of gold and silver.

Claims have been staked and recorded for twenty square miles of territory, where an immense body of coal has been found. Tests were made at four different places within an area of three miles along the Metagama River, and coal was found each time.

Assays of samples so far have been very favorable, and interested parties are thoroughly satisfied that good commercial coal has at last been discovered in northern Ontario.

The coal fields are located about sixty miles north of the Grand Trunk Pacific and west of Cochrane, and from the formation the Metagama River seems to have cut through an immense bed of coal, as it is found on both banks.

The banks and high bluffs are seamed with the precious commodity.

Should a thorough assay of samples brought out, and careful inspection of deposits bear out the reports already given by engineers and prospectors, a continuation of the T. & N. O. Ry. to the new coal fields will be a matter of but a short time only.

Syndicates are being hastily organized to get in on the latest turn of fortune's wheel, and to be ready for a dash when the streams open, while a number of parties have taken advantage of the snow to get in before the breakup.

Already twenty square miles of territory have been staked, representing twenty claims, each coal claim comprising a mile.

This staking was one along the Metagama River.

The personnel of the parties who are in on the ground floor of the coal position is a guarantee that there is something tangible and genuine about the finds, and the mining recorder's office at Haileybury contains some interesting information which the general public is not familiar with.

Martin Shannon, of North Bay, formerly employed on the G.T.P. survey, has just returned from Metagama River, north of the Transcontinental Railway, and a syndicate is being formed in town to send him back at the head of a party to locate coal lands.

Parties coming out from the Metagama River country this week met four different parties going in, all looking for coal.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

A roughcast house near Belleville, said to be a century old, was burned.

Two more arrests have been made at Montreal in connection with the Rattray failure.

James Hobson, who is said to have a sister in Canada, was fatally injured in a sand-pit at Pontiac, Mich., where he was working.

Jotham P. Allds, a New York State Senator, was branded as a bribe-taker by his colleagues at Albany, but resigned before the vote was taken.

Much of the booty secured by robbers in the postoffice at Richmond, Va., was located in three trunks which detectives traced to New York.

Winnipeg fruit importers have petitioned the Dominion Government to allow the free importation of fruit and vegetables during the winter months.

Mr. Asquith, in the British House of Commons, moved that his resolutions for the shortening of the life of a Parliament, and for the abolishing of the veto of the Lords be considered in committee of the whole.

GETS FOUR YEARS FOR BURGLARY

Yesterday in court he was sent to Kingston Penitentiary for four years. He pleaded guilty to seven charges of entering Ottawa business places and of direct theft in six.

Salt Company Extends.

Windsor, March 30.—It is learned that a deal was completed a few days ago whereby a Canadian Salt Co. of Windsor acquired a big tract of marsh land at Sandwich, west of the Lagoon Park Hotel, which will be converted into a branch of the main plant in this city. The property cost about $40,000.

PROBE IN ALBERTA

Investigation of Railway Deal Started by Commissioner—Bennett is Objected to.

Edmonton, Alta., March 30.—The royal commission enquiring into the agreement entered into between the Alberta Government and the Great Waterways Railway Co., promoted by an American syndicate, and which is a result of the recent sensational "split" among the Government supporters in the Legislature, opened yesterday morning. The day's proceedings were directed to securing, as exhibits, the production of all documents and correspondence that may be in the possession of interested parties.

The investigation is expected to reveal all or nothing in connection with the charges which have been made regarding the sale of bonds of the company, in which several officials of the company were alleged to have received a "rake-off."

W. L. Nash, K.C., and L. M. Johnstone are official counsel. P. J. Nolan represents Premier Rutherford, and D. M. Biggar appears for Attorney-General Cross. Norman McKenzie, Regina, is watching the interests of J. K. Cornwall, M.P.P., whose vote was challenged on the ground that he was a member of the company. H. A. Robson, K.C., Winnipeg, represents the Waterways Company, and R. B. Bennett, M.P.P., assisted by H. H. Farlee, represents the "insurgents."

At the outset Mr. Robson took exception to the appearance of Bennett, on the ground that his cross-examination would be an attempt to investigate the deal for an ulterior purpose.

Bennett pointed out that the resolution appointing the commission gave them the right to hear any counsel in the public interest, and he asserted that the sixteen insurgents represented public interests. Mr. Biggar claimed the appearance of Bennett was a reflection on the counsel appointed by the commission, who, however, upheld Bennett, the chairman stating that they deemed it unwise to interfere with the cross-examination of any of the counsel present, in order that the public may be satisfied that the investigation is complete.

Mr. Robson announced positively that the president, W. R. Clarke, would appear personally to testify.

Secretary Harvie produced the files, as produced in the House. Premier Rutherford, adding two recently received letters, testified that the files were complete to the best of his knowledge, and Deputy Provincial Treasurer McLeod testified that the files were complete.

J. K. Cornwall was asked to produce all the correspondence relating to his connection with the Athabaska syndicate, and swore it was all in the hands of his solicitor.

"LAWYER MINISTER" IS DEAD AT BOSTON

Boston, March 30.—Rev. Albert Walkley of Ottawa is dead at the Massachusetts General Hospital as the result of an operation following several years of impaired health.

In addition to filling a pulpit at Ottawa, where he was born on Sept. 17, 1851, Mr. Walkley preached at Manistee, Mich., Hartford and at Marblehead, Mass., and had won considerable attention here as the "lawyer minister." Mr. Walkley came to Marblehead from Ottawa in 1902, after which he went into law.

He graduated from the Boston University Law School in 1906.

FIRED BULLETS AT POLICE STATION

Belleville, March 30.—Early yesterday morning a young man named Mackie got into a doctor's rig and drove furiously down the street. He was arrested. About 1 a.m. H. McGinnis went to the police station and wanted to get Mackie released. He was unsuccessful. He went back about 8 o'clock, and was again put out by the police. Then he drew a revolver and fired two shots through the station door, and another through the fanlight. The police did not attempt to arrest him, but an information was laid for discharging firearms within the city limits.

No Agreement at Ottawa in Connection With Jurisdiction of Provinces

Ottawa, March 30.—A conference between representatives of the Federal and various Provincial Governments on the question of the respective jurisdiction of the Governments in the matter of the incorporation of companies came to a close yesterday afternoon without any definite agreement.

The following resolutions, which had been proposed by representatives of the Provincial Government's, but which had not been agreed to by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues—who made counter proposals that the whole question should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada and to the Privy Council at London—were given out.

"The delegates of the provinces, assembled at Ottawa, have adopted unanimously the following resolutions:

"Whereas it has been proposed by the Government of Canada to submit to the Supreme Court of Canada the question of the jurisdiction of the provinces and the Federal Parliament respectively in reference to the incorporation of companies, and of rights of companies so incorporated;

"And, whereas the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of the C.P.R. v. Ottawa Fire Insurance Co., has already upheld the contention of the provinces in this behalf;

"It is, therefore, resolved That the provinces, in view of this judgment, do not think it expedient or advisable to consent to another, or further submission, involving substantially the same issues;

"That they are of opinion that it is not in the public interest that the powers exercised by the provinces for over forty years should again be brought in question;

"That they believe that foreign corporations should not be accorded or enjoy, within any province, greater powers than companies incorporated by sister provinces;

"That they express their willingness to join in a conference to draft an amendment to B.N.A. Act, to more clearly define and set at rest the respective rights of the Dominion and the provinces in this respect.

"(Signed) L. A. Taschreau,
"Chairman."

The fundamental issue is whether a company, which is incorporated by a province, acquires by reason of such incorporation the legal right to do business in other provinces.

The Dominion Government was represented by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who presided: Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Hon. Chas. Murphy, and Thomas Mulvey, K.C., Under Secretary of State; Ontario by Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary; C. H. Ritchie, K.C., and E. Bailey of the Attorney-General's Department; Quebec by Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Hon. P. S. G. Mackenzie and Charles Lanctot, Deputy Attorney-General; New Brunswick by Premier Hazen and Hon. H. F. MacLeod, and Manitoba by Hon. Colin Campbell and Hon. J. H. Howden, Saskatchewan by Hon. W. F. Turgeon.

Nova Scotia, P. E. Island, Alberta and British Columbia were not represented.

TRIED SUICIDE WHEN ARRESTED

Welland, March 30.—Jessie Adams, 22 years old, is at the point of death at the home of Augustus Cook of Marshville, the result of a dose of carbolic acid, self-administered.

On Monday afternoon, about four o'clock, Constable William McIndoe of Dunnville, arrived at the Cook home, where Adams has been working, with a warrant for the young man's arrest on a charge of stealing a watch from a person in Dunnville. Adams submitted quietly enough, but just before the constable was ready to depart, he asked permission to go to his room to change an article of attire.

A minute afterwards he was heard to scream, and when his room was entered, he was found writhing in agony. Dr. Park was called, but states that there is little chance of Adams' recovery. He is a mason by trade, but has been doing odd jobs during the winter. His home is at Delhi.

HOW THE LAW IS ENFORCED

Both those who earnestly believe in prohibition and those who honestly oppose it must agree that whatever the laws relating to the sale of liquor are they should be strictly enforced. In districts where local option has been adopted the Government should see that no liquor is sold. In districts where there are licenses any violation of the license laws should be severely punished.

The 'Pioneer,' the Toronto prohibition organ, a paper controlled by temperance men who have certainly not been Conservatives in the past, says, in reference to the way the Whitney Government enforces the laws:

"In the Province of Ontario the liquor laws are carried out in a manner that reflects credit upon the government in general and in particular upon the gentleman who is at the head of the License Department. . . . Much of the success of the restrictive liquor laws of Ontario is to be credited to the determined purpose of the government, that the law shall control the liquor traffic and that the liquor traffic shall not defy the law."

This is a high tribute to the Conservative Government of Ontario. How different conditions were when the Liberals were in power in Ontario every temperance man knows. Then the Government hypocritically pretended to sympathize with the prohibitionists and made them vague promises while it was secretly in league with liquor sellers and forced them to work for the Liberal party.

HAS COAL BEEN FOUND?

For many years past newspapers have from time to time published reports of the discovery of coal in the older sections of the Province of Ontario, although geologists have always said that the geological formation is such that coal can never be found. On examination all the reported discoveries of coal in old Ontario have proved to be fakes or mistakes of people who did not know how to distinguish coal from other substances that look something like it.

But the geologists do not say that the geological formation of New Ontario between the Height of Land and Hudson Bay forbids the finding of coal. There is a possibility that it may be found. Reports of coal finds in that region, will, therefore, be received with more interest than similar reports coming from any part of Old Ontario, but nevertheless they will not be accepted very readily by the people of Ontario, who have so often heard of coal discoveries in the Province without any noticeable increase in the supply of coal or any reduction in the price.

The latest report is that the commissioners of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, the Government line running into the north country, have discovered a vast field of good coal. It is said that the commissioners are keeping the matter secret until tests have been made.

It will be better not to believe too much until a definite statement is published by the Ontario Government.

A MAN BOTH GOOD AND GREAT

The Toronto World, which has never been very friendly to Mr. Robert L. Borden, the Conservative leader, has lately published several special despatches from Ottawa to the effect that the French-Canadian Conservative members and a certain number of English-speaking Conservative members of the House would like to see Mr. Robert L. Borden deposed from the leadership of the Conservative party. Some of the French-Canadian members are dissatisfied because Mr. Borden does not oppose participation in Imperial naval defence, while certain English-speaking Conservatives are displeased because Mr. Borden, while advocating an emergency vote of money for Dreadnoughts, to be built in England, favors as a permanent policy the building in Canada of a Canadian navy which will be a unit of the Imperial navy.

The French-Canadian critics wish Canada to hold aloof from the rest of the Empire. The other critics have such a mean opinion of Canadian ability that they think we should hand our money over to the British Government to spend for us.

Mr. Borden's policy is the sane and sensible one, and will prevail in the end. It is in accord with the National Policy of the Conservative party. It is the policy Sir John A. Macdonald would favor if he were alive to-day. It is a British policy, but it is also Canadian. It does not set British sentiment against Canadian sentiment.

As regards the French-Canadian insurgents it may be pointed out that the number of French-Canadian Conservatives in the House of Commons is so small that they cannot be said to speak for the Conservative party in Quebec province. There are a great many constituencies in the Province of Quebec that are represented by Liberals who secured very small majorities. A very slight change in the vote in these constituencies would elect Conservatives in the next elections. Nearly one-half the electors in Quebec Province voted Conservative in the last general election. Now what authority is there for saying that this great body of French-Canadian Conservatives, who are unrepresented in the House of Commons at the present time, are opposed to the leadership of Mr. Robert L. Borden? Mr. Borden's attitude toward French-Canadians has always been kindly, considerate and absolutely fair. We do not think the majority of the French-Canadians are in sympathy with the attack on Leader Borden, but if the French-Canadians do unite against him, English-speaking Conservatives should be solid for him, and any English-speaking Conservative members who oppose him should be left at home after the next elections.

Mr. Borden is superior to any other man in the Canadian House of Commons on either side of politics. Even the Toronto World, which has always been disposed to belittle him, admits that he is both good and great. The World's Ottawa correspondent says:—

"That Mr. Borden is a man of integrity and singleness of purpose has never been questioned, and it is admitted by all that he is a great man. In very many respects he is the biggest man in the House of Commons, excelling the Premier and everybody else in many attributes which combine to make a man greater than his fellows."

A man both good and great! That is the sort of a leader that the great majority of Conservatives throughout Canada want, and if any Conservative members of Parliament, whether French or English, don't approve of his leadership, they had better resign. A dozen of them, if there are that many altogether, could be more easily spared from the Conservative party than Mr. Robert L. Borden.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Toronto Telegram says in reference to the Fielding tariff negotiations at Albany:—"Canadian autonomy forbids John Bull to control Canada's naval policy. Canadian autonomy permits Uncle Sam to control Canada's tariff policy. Vive la Canadian autonomy, as they have it at Ottawa."

The concessions made by Canada to the United States are published to-day, but the people of Canada would like to know what further concessions will be made when the reciprocity negotiations agreed upon by President Taft and Mr. Fielding are begun.

It is stated that the power which can be developed on the American side of the St. Lawrence if the Canadian Government allows the dam to be built as proposed by American promoters will be worth two hundred million dollars. The question is, how much will it be worth to the Ottawa Liberal politicians who have been trying so hard to force it through Parliament.

Telegraphers Want Higher Schedule.

Winnipeg, March 30.—Officials of the three big railway companies, the C.P.R., C.N.R. and G.T.R., were interviewed yesterday morning with reference to the possibility of labor troubles during the coming summer. Little information was obtained, but the general belief was that the wage schedules would be easily adjusted.

The telegraph operators of the entire C.P.R. system are also making demand for a higher schedule. A conference between the union and the railway will be held in Toronto this week, attended by delegates from all along the line.

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"A kind of holy office of the inquisition, consisting of one infallible member," Trafford threw in.

"You couldn't stop at one isolated case," Mrs. George went on. "You'd find yourself led further than you expected."

"Do you mean that everything was wrong?" Paula demanded, stopping in her walk and looking haughtily down at Laura.

"Everything could be made to seem wrong, I've no doubt," Laura replied quietly, "if we went by the tests you seem determined to apply. There'd be no end to the extent to which you'd become involved. One million wouldn't be enough, nor two, nor three."

"I shouldn't care for that," Paula flung out, turning toward the door. "Rather than feel that we've become rich by grinding other people into poverty I'd give away everything we have."

"It's lucky for us that you can't," Trafford laughed. "It's lucky for you too, Paula!" he called after her as she was leaving the room. "Come back! I've got something more to say to you."

She turned at the door and confronted him. Her blue eyes were shining with tears, and the color in her cheeks had contracted into two hectic spots of scarlet.

"As far as I can see," he went on, with smiling sarcasm, "the only way to help your painter man is to marry him."

"I would," she returned, holding her head high—"I would if I couldn't do him justice in any other way."

Trafford laughed aloud.

"Ho, ho! Well done, Paula!" he cried after her as she went proudly and indignantly up the great stairway.

But Mrs. Trafford was vexed.

"Why on earth should you put that notion into her head, George?" she complained fretfully. "You know as well as I do that she's quite capable of doing it."

CHAPTER VIII.

"HE'LL never be the same again, Alice," Marah Winship said complainingly. "You've never seen any one more changed than he since the first day he began to paint her."

"I shouldn't bother about that," Lady Alice returned in her bluff, hearty way, "so long as the change is for the better."

"But is it?"

"Certainly. If you can judge from his work. That picture is a man's work, not a boy's. It's got the two things he's lacked hitherto—inspiration and authority. He's always had drawing and color. I give you my word, Marah, I'm astonished, perfectly astonished—I, who looked for big things from him. That woman is Paula Trafford as surely as Rembrandt's 'Old Lady' in Amsterdam is Elisabeth Bas.'

"If it had only been any one else in the world rather than a Trafford!"

"I call that stuff and nonsense and dying in the face of Providence. The boy's business is to paint pretty women. And where could he have found a better subject? You'd feel the same about any one else who had good looks enough to give him pleasure in putting them on canvas. Oh, yes, I know all about the past! But, good gracious, Marah, you're not a Corsican, to carry on a vendetta from generation to generation! I should say that if they've fallen in love with each other it would be uncommonly rare poetic justice for them to make a match of it."

"That's a different thing. Ludovic, poor lad, came into the world bound hand and foot with duties and with a whole load of family traditions crushing him down. He can't marry the first pretty face he takes a fancy to. He's got to keep in the picture, so to speak. There's nothing more incongruous in my opinion than an English duke with a rich American duchess. It's out of drawing and off the background. It leaps at you from the frame. Of course if Ludovic had done it I could have lived through it and made the best of it, but I shouldn't like it."

"We have our family pride as well as you," Marah observed, with sharp eyes snapping. "Until we were driven out our own family had lived on the same land in New Hampshire for nearly 300 years."

They sat in the long studio before Winship's unfinished portrait. Lady Alice in her black cloth gown, Tyrolese hat and stout leather boots was a fine type of the Englishwoman who is so sure of her means and position that she can dress as she pleases. Above the two women Paula Trafford sat as if enthroned. She had been painted much as Winship had suggested in the first moment of inspiration.

"She'll have the money," Lady Alice continued, unfolding the plan, "and he'll have the fame. The one will not be better dowered than the other. This bit of work means that he is going to the gate of the temple with a good sharp rap. They'll let him in quickly enough this time. It's marvelous how he's managed so much detail with such simplicity. And yet," she went on in her summary, "nothing takes your attention away from the girl herself. He's caught the meaning of her face with nothing short of power. I've seen her look just like that. In fact, it's her characteristic expression. Don't you notice it, Marah?"

"I can see it's very well painted."

"Then it's a pity you can't see more. That rather pathetic kind of loveliness is unusual in itself, but when you add her wondering, questioning expression you make it positively significant. Here you've got not only a pretty woman, but a human soul. Any one might think that with her puzzled, ranging gaze she was asking the eternal what and why of earthly existence.

The grating of a latchkey in the lock of the door cut short Lady Alice's observations, and Winship himself entered. During the greetings that followed Marah, murmuring something about seeing to her mother, slipped from the room. Winship asked Lady Alice many questions: When had she come? Where was she staying? How long was she to remain? He showed his surprise and pleasure at seeing her.

"I'm especially glad on account of that," he said, with a gesture toward the portrait, when they had finished the first preliminary topics of meeting. "How do you like it? Sit down there—just there. That's the best light. Now tell me what you think of it. There's no one whose opinion I'd rather have than yours. Is it she? That's the thing I care for most. You know her better than I do."

"And yet you seem to know her pretty well."

"I do. I divine her."

"It's a very pleasant form of speculation, isn't it? You've painted with a good deal of enthusiasm. I can see that."

"It takes enthusiasm to transfer a living personality to the canvas," he said evasively. "You can paint clothes and features by mere skill, but it's only sympathy with your subject that will put the whole character into a single look."

"And you find that she inspires it—the sympathy you speak of?"

"If she didn't her situation would."

"You mean"—

"I mean that for me she belongs to the group of women overwhelmed by the fatality of circumstances, the representative circumstances of their time. Each age has its own types, which often become its own victims. In one age it may be an Iphigenia, in another a Lady Jane Grey and in another a Mme. Royale. They are simple women, simple girls, without in born greatness of any kind, but the cyclope of forces concentrates and thrusts above them. There she sits as I see her, the type and the victim of a commercial age and a commercial people. All the rights and wrongs of industry and finance are forced into her hands—their honest gains, their pitiless competitions, their brutal robberies, their sordid trickeries and their moral assassinations. She sums them up and represents them."

"Yes," Lady Alice assented, with a grim smile, "just about to the same extent as I sum up the history and privileges of the house of lords."

"Oh, more than that! You're one of your class. She stands alone in hers. She can't be other than representative. Destiny has singled her out for the task."

"And she's such a sweet, gentle soul."

"That's where the curious irony of it comes in. Do you remember in the cathedral at Ghent the tomb of Mary of Burgundy, she a frail, pinched little body, who died at twenty-four? She was nothing but a girl, little older than Miss Trafford there, but the storm forces of her time centered around her, tossing her into a place in history utterly out of keeping with her personal importance. In the United States today women don't inherit duchies, like Mary of Burgundy. They inherit money."

"So much the better for the men who marry them," Lady Alice broke in bluntly. "Some one has to marry them. Some one will have to marry Paula Trafford."

Winship picked up a brush and began to fleck touches on the soft black draperies.

"Well, won't they?" Lady Alice persisted.

"I suppose so," he agreed without turning round.

"Then why shouldn't it be you?"

"I've so few ambitions of that kind."

"So few fiddlesticks!"

"And, besides, when I marry I hope it will not be for money, but for love."

"Love!" Lady Alice sniffed. "Is love so out of the question? You couldn't have painted her as you've done if"—

"Shall I have to fall in love with all the beautiful women I hope to paint in order to do them justice?"

"Not now, because she will have taught you the secret once for all."

Winship was spared the necessity of answering this retort by the opening of a door near by, while his mother, aided by Marah, groped her way in.

Lady Alice sprang up and took the blind woman into her strong arms. When the first embraces had been exchanged she asked Marah in leading her to a seat. While Marah busied herself in preparing tea Lady Alice entertained Mrs. Winship with the account of her doings through the winter. It was inevitable that the talk should drift to Roger's work and Paula Trafford.

"She's a sweet girl," Mrs. Winship said tremulously. "I've come to love her very dearly. So has my son. Haven't you, Roger?"

"I can quite understand that," Lady Alice observed dryly.

"Oh, yes!" he laughed. "It's quite intelligible. But all terms are relative, and mother's don't bear being torn away from the context."

"She's been a great comfort to me," Mrs. Winship, pursued gently. "I haven't been up well during the latter part of the winter, and her kindness has been very sweet to me. She comes and reads to me when Marah and Roger are away, just as you used to do, dear. She took me to drive one day, but I'm afraid that was too much for me. I don't suppose I shall go out again now till I go—home."

Winship and Lady Alice exchanged glances. It was evident to both that the aged woman had grown very frail. The voice was strong and the look eager, as though the spirit were straining itself to break away.

"If you'll excuse me a minute," Winship said, trying to speak cheerily, "I'll leave you ladies to your reminiscences. I've got an idea I should like to work out"—

"It would be a pity to lose it, then," Lady Alice replied. "Your company will keep, but an idea must be seized on the wing."

"The Lord is very good to me," Mrs. Winship continued in a high, shaking voice, while Winship, with his back toward them, worked rapidly at the canvas. "I see that more and more plainly as the time draws near. And, oh my dear, of all his mercies the last seems to me the best."

"Then you must be a happy woman, Mrs. Winship. Most of us see the Lord's mercies to us otherwise."

"I am a happy woman, dear. I have everything to make me so. And yet it would have been harder for me to enter into the joy of my Lord if I hadn't learned to love Paul Trafford's daughter. I had the memory of bitter feelings still, but even that has passed away since she came."

"I don't wonder you love her," Lady Alice murmured sympathetically.

"And Roger loves her, too," the mother whispered, bending forward. "Haven't you noticed it?"

"Well, I haven't had much time."

"Yes, he does. He tries to hide it, but he couldn't do that from me. And she loves him. I've seen it. I'm sure of it. Oh, my dear, they were made for each other, my son and Paul Trafford's daughter! If we had only foreseen that, how much anguish we might have spared each other! But it's better that it should be late than not at all. I shall go home to tell my dear husband that all strife is at an end."

When she had finished her tea Lady Alice crossed the room toward Winship.

"May one have a peep?" she asked, looking over his shoulder. "I wouldn't speak anything by overzeal, you know. I should think you had almost got to the point where you might leave well enough alone. So this is the young lady a man couldn't marry for love!"

"I didn't say that," Winship returned, with a little warmth.

"Well, what did you say?"

"I said—really, Lady Alice, I don't remember."

"No, nor I, either, exactly. You said you couldn't marry her for love. Wasn't that it?"

"I don't suppose I could marry her at all," he replied, turning around and looking at her frankly. "I can't shut my eyes to the fact that the two lives nearest mine are blasted beyond all hope. The curious thing is that the power that did it should have come right under my hand. Can't you see that when I look at that"—he nodded in the direction of his mother's chair—"when I look at Marah, the temptation to strike back should be almost irresistible?"

"I can understand that easily enough. The instinct is as primitive as mother love. But in this sophisticated age of the world's history most people think that after defeat reconstruction is wiser than revenge."

"Ah, yes!" he laughed, with a curious glitter in the eyes. "But in my case revenge would take the form of what you call reconstruction."

"I see."

"You see some of it, not all."

LINDSAY BAND LOSES SPONSOR

The Sylvester Mfg. Co., who have conducted the Sylvester band, under the leadership of Mr. W. H. Roenigk, for the past few years, have decided to drop the musical organization for the future.

In conversation with Mr. Sylvester this morning he stated that he would have nothing to do with the band this year.

This does not mean that Lindsay will be without a band as the town council will likely take the matter up at the next regular meeting and in all probability will run the organization as a citizens' band.

It is Mr. Roenigk's intention to have the band re-organized at once and give the citizens one of the best bands in the province. A number of musicians are still in town, and several new ones will be secured at an early date.—Lindsay Warder.

PROPOSED RAILWAY WOULD CUT OFF LARGE AMOUNT OF TRADE FROM LINDSAY

The Lindsay Warder says:—"For some time past citizens of Peterborough have been advocating the building of a railway from Peterborough to the northern townships. Many communications have appeared in the Peterborough Review relative to the matter, the last one appearing last week along with a cut illustrating a proposed route. If such a line was in operation it would mean that Lindsay would lose a large amount of the trade from the north country, which trade she now enjoys."

After reproducing a map and a letter published in the Review regarding the proposed railway, the Warder goes on to say:

"Glance at the accompanying map and it will be seen that if such a road was built (according to the route planned) Lindsay would suffer materially—Lindsay would lose the cream of the trade from the north, which she has been enjoying for years past. As matters stand at present, the town of Lindsay is not going ahead any too fast, and to lose that north trade would be to render a serious check to its growth.

It is pleasing to note that the members of the Lindsay Board of Trade are considering ways and means to promote the interests of the town of Lindsay. In conversation with one of the members the other day (a prominent merchant) he stated that he thought that merchants should co-operate and band themselves together in some sort of a compact for the purpose of bringing more people to Lindsay.

The conversation cropped up in an occasional way. The Warder representative passed a comment on the exceptionally large crowd in town last Saturday, people who were enjoying the Easter rate, and the Warder man remarked that it would be a wise step for the Board of Trade to take if they would endeavor to have the railways make a cheap rate on certain days in the month. The merchant in turn thought that the Lindsay merchants could make it worth the while for the country people, and the people from the surrounding towns to come to Lindsay to buy, and by offering them special inducements. He had not studied the matter over very carefully, but thought that some such scheme as offering them a rebate on their railway ticket, or giving them coupons on goods bought. He also suggested that one central place be picked on at which to leave all parcels—a place where the parcels could be checked.

Some such scheme would no doubt work out admirably in Lindsay, and could be worked up by the Board of Trade. Lindsay wants the trade, and that is the main thing."

No Room Here for Two Vags and an Umbrella-Mender, Arrested Yesterday

William White and George Garrett, who were released from their labors on the hill yesterday, once again appeared before Magistrate Domble this morning. Both men had been given a fifteen days' rest on charges of vagrancy, and on being liberated, neglected to connect with the railroad track and beat it.

In answer to His Worship White said that it would only take half an hour for him to get out of the city. He was given an hour.

Garrett also applied for a chance, and he was told to remove in the same time.

John Cassidy, an umbrella mender, found business rather dull yesterday and imbibed. He was told to transact his business elsewhere.

A DECREASE IN EXPENDITURES

Of the Central Charity Board in the First Three Months of This Year—$937.31 Has Been Paid Out

Comparing the expenditure of the Central Charity Board for the first three months of this year with the same number of months of last year, a decrease of $281.90 for this year is shown. Last year's figures were $1,219.21, while for this year, the sum of $937.31 was paid out for charity. Out of the latter amount, twenty cases, including those at the Protestant Home and House of Refuge are receiving charity. Besides this number there are eleven cases, which receive charity the year round. The demands made upon this board during the past winter have not been as heavy as in previous years, but even at that, Relief Officer Miller has been kept busy investigating and attending to cases throughout the city.

SPRING TIME IS CLEANING TIME

Early Season Lends Itself to City Beautifying—Nature Sets an Example

Peterborough people no doubt appreciate the fact that the present spell of fine weather is rather unprecedented so early in the season, but it is doubtful if so many are equally cognizant of the fact that the unwontedly open spring has a message and a duty for every citizen. With nature, the spring time is always a cleaning-up period. She dams up her rivers to carry down the effluvia and waste material that litter adjacent fields; what her rivers cannot reach she washes away with cleansing March rains, or dries in the heat of the ardent spring sun. She covers up unsightly spots with fresh green grass. She hides the winter nakedness of the trees with bursting buds that hint at the luxuriance of summer foliage to come. And as a finishing touch to the picture she waves her magic wand and wild flowers spring up to make brighter the darker vistas of the wooded places. All is a cleaning up and beautifying process.

Nature sets man a beautiful example in regard to cleaning up in the spring, but although she has done it for thousands of years, man is slow to take heed. There are hundreds of backyards in Peterborough that need cleaning up. Nature cannot make some people clean up their yards, and so the police have to take up the work every spring. It would be a good thing for Peterborough if nature's example was paid attention to as regards cleaning up.

NEW BOYS' SECRETARY FOR THE Y.M.C.A.

On Monday evening last the banquet closing a membership campaign in the boy's department of the Y.M.C.A. was held.

Nearly 75 boys were present, representing the new members and those who introduced them.

A short programme was opened by the toast to the King, which, after an attempt on the part of one boy to sing "He's a Jolly Good Fellow," was honored in the usual way. Mr. C. E. Sisson, representing the membership committee, followed with a speech in which he complimented the boys on their excellent work and expressed the appreciation of the Board of Directors for the work done.

Mr. Sisson then presented pins in suitable Y.M.C.A. design, to the boys who had secured the greatest number of members. These pins were donated by Mr. S. R. Hall and won by W.J. Hastie, first; T. Cuffe, second, in the employed boy's division, and Harold Lees, first; R. Howden, second, in the school boy's division.

Dr. J. E. Middleton, chairman of the boys' committee, spoke briefly outlining a progressive policy in the boy's department and particularly with reference to religious work.

At this juncture the chairman announced that a new boy's secretary in the person of Mr. Bert Sharpe of Hamilton, had been engaged and would arrive on Friday, April 1st, to take charge of the work.

The toast to the ladies was proposed by Mr. Ray Scott in a capable manner and ably responded to on behalf of the ladies by Mr. H. Lees.

The banquet closed by singing the association hymn, "Bleat be the Tie That Binds."

BANKERS HELD ANNUAL DANCE

The bankers held their annual dance last night at the Conservatory Hall and the affair was, in every detail, a brilliant success. There was an attendance of one hundred and ninety, and the evening was an enjoyable one for all. Bowdley's orchestra of five pieces, from Toronto, furnished the music, which was highly appreciated and commented upon.

Prof. F. Frank Vernon and his wife are the attraction at the Brock St. Roller Rink on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings of this week, with a matinee on Saturday, and no doubt their performance will be witnessed by large crowds, as they come here with a wide reputation as clever roller skaters. Prof. Vernon performs wonderful and fascinating feats on the rollers and with seemingly hardly an effort glides through the most astounding movements imaginable. One of his most effective acts is on stilts with skates fastened on the bottom. Assisted by his wife he shows many new and graceful ways of waltzing and two-stepping. The act, however, that probably makes the greatest hit is his auto novelty, in which he skates on a pair of miniature automobiles, having head lights and rear lights, and in appearance the duplicate of the real thing. The lights in the rink are turned off and in the darkness, being decorated all over with small electric lamps, Mr. Vernon presents a very novel appearance. The performance by the Vernons has to be seen to be appreciated, and the people of Peterborough are advised not to miss the entertainment.

OBITUARY

The death occurred at the family residence in Douro on March 24, of one of Douro's most well known and highly esteemed residents in the person of Mrs. John Kennedy. The deceased lady had been ailing for about six months with general debility, and although she spent about seven weeks in St. Joseph's Hospital, Peterborough, it failed to effect a cure, and she declined gradually until the end came. Her maiden name was Margaret Crough, and she was born in the County of Tipperary, Ireland, in 1845, being thus 64 years of age when she died. She came to Canada in 1866, and five years later she was married to her now sorrowing husband, who, with four sons and one daughter, are left to mourn the loss of a loving wife and mother. The sons are Michael, Timothy and Wm. John at home, and Daniel, of Peterborough, and Mrs. John H. Leahy, of Douro. The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon, March 26th, from the family residence, 13, concession 4, Douro, to St. Joseph's church, and interment was made in St. Joseph's cemetery. The funeral was one of the largest seen in the township for years, there being 75 rigs in the procession. The pall bearers were the four sons, Michael, Timothy, Daniel, Wm., and John H. Leahy, and her nephew, Timothy Crough, Ennismore. The sympathy of the entire community is extended to the sorrowing relatives in their bereavement.

ALIENISTS SAY HENDERSON IS A HIGH-GRADE IMBECILE

Interesting Affidavit From Mother of Prisoner on Trial for Murder---She Says He is Weak-minded—Prisoner Still Shows Indifference to His Grave Position.

The most interesting evidence introduced at the trial of Robert Henderson this morning at the Spring Assizes of the High Court at which Mr. Justice Riddell is presiding, was an affidavit taken by the prisoner's mother, as to her son's history. The session of the court this morning opened at 8.30 and the prisoner pleaded not guilty to the charge of the murder near Norwood of Miss Martha McPherson, 77 years of age. The prisoner maintained the same attitude of indifference that he has displayed since his arrest and as he sat in the dock boyish and even insignificant looking it was hard for one to imagine him as guilty of the particularly revolting and vicious murder of which he is accused.

The evidence, to some extent, was largely of the same character as that which has been given before in connection with the case, although some new and interesting testimony was introduced. Mr. E. A. DuVernet, of Toronto, conducted the prosecution and Mr. F. D. Kerr defended Henderson.

The first witness called was Miss McPherson, the aged sister of the victim of the assault, it is alleged, that was committed by Henderson on Jan. 28th, in the old ladies' little home, about two and a half miles from Norwood, in Asphodel township. She again recited the details of the assault and was followed by Mrs. Hagere, John Roebuck, Richard Leper, and Thomas Burke, all either neighbors or relatives, who told what they knew of the affair or the chase and capture of the prisoner and Constable Bennett, of Havelock, and Inspector Reburn, of the provincial police.

INSANITY IN FAMILY.

In the affidavit taken by the prisoner's mother, a widow of Robert Henderson, residing at 167 York Road, Durham County, England, she stated the prisoner was a second child of a family of four and was 17 years of age, being born on October 8th, 1892. At the time of his birth his mother's heart was seriously affected. For eight weeks after his birth he was totally blind. When 5 or 6 years of age he met with a serious accident to his head by running into a brick wall and this had bothered him a great deal. He was of a passionate disposition, according to his mother, and was weak-minded and smoked a great deal.

On the 15th day of May, 1909, he left for Canada. There had been a great deal of insanity in the family, especially on the mother's side, two great uncles having committed suicide and other relatives were subjected to fits and insanity.

CONFESSED ASSAULT.

Fred Bennett, the Havelock constable who made the arrest told of being summoned to take Henderson, who was on the C.P.R. track near Havelock, with a revolver in his hand. The constable carried his revolver also and Henderson told the officer he would give up. He was handcuffed and taken to the Havelock jail. He asked the constable if either of the women were dead and was told by the officer he didn't know. The prisoner carried a revolver of 32 calibre with all the chambers loaded, and all the shells but two were marked as though attempts had been made to explode them.

At the lockup in Havelock the prisoner conversed with the constable and Provincial Detective Reburn concerning the assault. He said he first struck one of the old ladies and then the other. Henderson, the witness said, was warned both by himself and Inspector Reburn that anything he said might be used against him. "He was the coolest prisoner I ever arrested under the circumstances," said the officer.

Provincial Inspector Reburn, of Toronto, said the prisoner confessed the assault to him after he had been warned. The prisoner told him his motive of the assault was money. He said he paid ten cents for a meal before the assault. He went away, he said, and came back in ten minutes and committed the assault.

Dr. Sutton, a practicing physician of Norwood, was called to attend the injured ladies at about a quarter to one on the afternoon of January 28th. Dr. Pettigrew, of Norwood, was called on the case also. He found the older Miss McPherson was in bed with a cut about two and a half inches long in her head, the cut penetrating the outer table of the skull. It didn't penetrate through the inner table of the skull. To the court Dr. Sutton stated that the wound might have been caused from the back of an axe.

Under cross-examination by Mr. Kerr, the witness said there was reasonable hope of the deceased old lady's recovery up to the 11th day of February, when she commenced to sink. He considered that the postmortem had been necessary to ascertain the cause of death.

Dr. Pettigrew said he attended the late Miss McPherson. The cause of death was the shock from the force of the blow apparently given by prisoner. After the postmortem it was discovered no internal weaknesses sufficient to be responsible for death.

Dr. Crawford, of Havelock, made an examination of the body of the late Miss McPherson. As a cause of death there were fractures of the inner and outer tables of the skull. This had been the cause of death, the doctor stated.

Mr. Kerr cross-examined the doctor closely as to the possible or probable causes or contributing causes of death. An abcess was found on the lung, which might have produced death by the transfer of the poison through the vascular system to the brain. The blow was the cause of the condition found in the brain, was the doctor's opinion.

Dr. McClelland, of Peterborough, assisted Dr. Crawford in the postmortem examination and said he concurred with him in his evidence as to the cause of death.

Mr. Henderson Nesbitt, the jailer of Peterborough county jail.—The prisoner seemed quite indifferent about his position and didn't worry or fret. He slept well and ate well. Whenever the jailer called at night he found the prisoner asleep and displayed no anxiety at any time. The prisoner was always quiet and apparently unconcerned.

Rev. Dr. Langfeldt said he had conversed with the prisoner concerning his position.

Dr. Clarke of Toronto, was the next witness. He was in court at the instance of the Attorney-General's department. On February 26th he and Dr. R. Bruce Smith examined Henderson in the county jail. This examination was done on instruction of the Attorney-General's department.

The doctors found no evidence of mental disease, but he was what was known as a high grade imbecile. His intellectual side was better developed than his moral side. He seemed devoid of moral sense. He had a high arched palate, a condition found frequently in imbeciles. He had rather defective teeth. He had remarkable memory for dates, showed some cunning, but absolutely no realization of the position he was in. His one idea seemed to be the accumulation of money. He seemed to regard the house where the crime was committed as a place where misers lived. He had no sense of moral responsibility and simply had no ability to grasp the common, ordinary truths of religion. His environment seemed to have been very good. He said he had been sent to church very regularly, was a chorister for a time and had special training along those lines. His chief idea was to get money, and he was in Durham jail in England for appropriating for himself money collected for a sporting club.

The witness admitted that heredity had a great bearing on insanity. To the judge Dr. Clarke stated that the prisoner had no disease of mind, and would probably realize that he would be criminally responsible for the act of assault.

Dr. R. Bruce Smith, Provincial Inspector of hospitals and public charities for the province, agreed with Dr. Clarke in his analysis of the prisoner's mental condition. He had no moral conscience to restrain him from doing right or wrong. He was a moral imbecile, and that was an original defect and could not be charged. In other intellectual respects the prisoner was on the average bright. Dr. Smith thought the prisoner would realize the quality and nature of his act.

The court adjourned at 1.15 till 2 o'clock.

BASIS OF THE TARIFF AGREEMENT MADE KNOWN TO-DAY IN THE COMMONS

Special to the Review.

Ottawa, March 30.—With President Taft about to grant to Canada the minimum tariff extending to Canada the minimum rates of the Payne Bill, there was to-day made public the basis of agreement between Canada and the United States government. In a letter Finance Minister Fielding, on the 29th inst., wrote to Secretary of State Knox at Washington. He referred to the Albany and Washington conferences and said: "While unable to waive any of the contentions which Canada has had through our discussion of the subject, I have appreciated the exceptional circumstances and reasons advanced by the President in support of his request. A tariff conflict between the two countries would undoubtedly be a matter of the gravest concern for both. Both parties to the difference should, I realize, be willing to go as far as possible to avoid such a conflict. I have observed with satisfaction that your government are not disposed to press some of their earlier contentions respecting our commercial treaties which, from our point of view, we could not admit. This being the case, I feel that our Government should go as far as possible to meet the views of the President. On behalf of the Canadian Government I agree that we shall forthwith recommend to the Parliament of Canada such amendment of the Canadian Customs tariff as will reduce the duties on the list of articles agreed upon between us such articles and the reduced rates of duty being:

Then follows a list as to reductions of fruits, perfumery photographic goods, watch actions and movements and certain feather goods.

MAY ORGANIZE AN INTER. Y.M.C.A. BASEBALL LEAGUE

Last night the Y.M.C.A. baseball club held a largely attended meeting in the Association rooms.

Arrangements were made for financing the club by selling tickets for the closing game of the three-game basketball race between the school boys and employed boys at an early date. It was decided for the present to charge no membership fee. An executive committee, composed of Messrs. S. R. Hall, H. Mulhern, H. Lees and M. Pearson, was appointed, with instructions to endeavor to re-organise a city, intermediate or junior league, and also form an inter-Y.M.C.A. league, which would cover as many "Y" boys as possible.

Prospects in Y.M.C.A. baseball are good for the present season, and members are consequently enthusiastic.

The Early Game

An interested reader has handed the following to the baseball editor:—

The devil was the first coacher, says a retired baseball editor. He coached Eve when she stole first. Adam stole second. When Isaac met Rebecca at the well she was walking with the pitcher. Samson struck out a good many times when he beat the Philistines. Moses made his first run when he slew the Egyptians. Cain made a base hit when he killed Abel. Abraham made a sacrifice, the prodigal son made a home run, David was a long distance thrower, and Moses shut out the Egyptians at the Red Sea.

Lawn Bowling and Tennis Club Meeting

The officers and directors of the Cobourg Horse Show Association were elected last night at the annual meeting. This year's show will be held on August 16, 17, 18 and 19.

Conditions of the reinstatement of Kling into organized baseball will be known to-morrow.

The Cobourg Red Birds have organized. The secretary is Jack Toms, Box 96, Cobourg.

St. Michael's hockey team will be banquetted next Tuesday evening at the St. Charles Hotel, Toronto.

How a Bear Fishes.

Few people have had the opportunity of seeing a bear feeding—that is, in his native state—and fewer still have seen him fishing. But fish he does, and in it he displays an amount of patience and dexterity that is amazing. He will lie motionless upon an overhanging log or bank with paw poised and little beady eyes attentively scanning the water. Salmon and trout are his chief delight, and, should one come near enough to the surface, he is snapped out on the bank with a flip and a twist, and vanishes in Bruin's capacious maw.

A Nautical Explanation.

The officers were on the quarter-deck looking at a comet and noticed an eager discussion among the crew forward. The captain called one of the men aft and asked him what was the subject of discussion.

"We were trying to make out what that there thing was," replied the man, pointing to the comet.

"And what do you imagine it is?"

"Dunno, your honor, but Bill Jones here, as knows most things, says as how it's a star that's sprung a leak."

Two women were killed in a collision of inter-urban electric trains near Lima, Ohio.

CONEY ISLAND.

The Millions It Takes In Mostly in Nickels and Dimes.

During the season last summer seven to eight million people made 20,000,000 trips to Coney Island. They spent there $45,000,000, mostly in nickels and dimes, and the total sum was three times what this nation paid to Napoleon for Louisiana or six times what we paid Russia for Alaska.

There are in Coney Island peanut stands the size of a broad top desk which rent for $1,500 a season. The men who sell frankfurters pay enormous sums for the right to stand where they do and get their money back in the nickels of the twenty millions.

On week days the attendance is large, but on Sundays and holidays it rises to a point where each visitor has room only to be happy standing still. On the Fourth of July 400,000 people crowded into the little island, bathed, shot the chutes, were photographed and ate "redhots." It was believed then that Coney would not hold a single additional visitor, but on Aug. 15 a new hundred thousand came, making half a million in one day.

It is a wonderful business, this Coney Island, but a very risky one. The 900,000,000 nickels depend upon the weather. When the mercury drops, profits fall to nothing. If a plague should break out and the island be quarantined, boats would stop running and the people would stay in their city homes. The Coney Island farmer must harvest his crop of nickels while the sun shines.—Success Magazine.

Mr. Hewlett and America.

Maurice Hewlett has never been in America. "I have never been and I do not know that I shall ever go," is the way Mr. Hewlett puts it recently. "It seems to me that it would be a terribly upsetting journey, and I hate to be upset. I know that I should loathe New York just as I loathe London, which I hate so much that I always write there, because there is nothing pleasant to distract me." When Mr. Hewlett is writing he lives in the exclusive Northwick terrace, hard by St. John's wood, in a house of white stucco, brass trimmed and bordered with flowers. He has, however, a favorite country place near Salisbury, where, as he puts it, "the life is so adorable that I have not strength of mind sufficient to give it up and tie myself to my desk." The dislike of travel may be at the root of Mr. Hewlett's disinclination to come to America, or something else may be. "You raging Americans," he said to a companion recently—"you raging Americans do not conceal your feelings well. There is no reason why you should."—Argonaut.

What Eskimos Think of White Men.

The Eskimos' opinion of white men is sometimes as uncomplimentary as the white men's opinion of them. Vilhjalmr Stefansson, who was the ethnologist in company with the recent Anglo-American polar expedition, writes in Harper's Magazine of his experiences in the arctic while living with Eskimo families, and he reports with Eskimo as saying that white men are as bad to travel with as babies. Indeed, they go further and say that white men are worse than babies, because though babies cry they don't argue, and white men are always "giving directions about things they don't understand."

Dr. F. H. Miller, of Chicago, will be the Federal Liberal candidate in East Elgin.

FUR TRADE TRAGEDIES

PROFITS WERE IMMENSE, BUT SO WERE DANGERS.

Unfriendly Indians Were the Greatest Peril of the Fur Traders of a Century Ago—Explorers Were Scholars and Scientists, But the Traders Were Out For Plunder, and Their Crimes Were Many and Ruthless.

In the early days great profits accrued from this fur-trade. During the three years following 1784, and not including the cargoes secured by the operations of Capt. Mears, 5,800 otter skins, valued at $160,700, were taken on the British Columbia coast and sold in China. From 1799 to 1802 inclusive, 48,500 skins were secured, which at an average of $30 a skin, represented a value of one and a half million dollars. One celebrated trader named Sturgis, states that in a single voyage he had collected 6,000 skins, and that in a single day he had purchased 560 of prime quality. Where such enormous profits could be made, no wonder the trade was prosecuted with vigor and, it must be said, often without scruples or regard for the rights of the natives.

Many of these early fur-traders were men of very different stamp from the explorers who had preceded them. The latter, representing for the most part, the Government of Great Britain, came in search of geographical knowledge. They were not tempted to wrong or cruelty by greed. They found on the whole the natives peaceably inclined, and they left them friends. The one object of the traders was to secure cargoes, and in securing them the difference between right and wrong was often overlooked. Liquor was supplied the natives and the inevitable debauchery followed. Often the hostility of the natives was roused and tragedies were enacted, as dark and bloody as any that ever formed the object of sea-faring tales. The recital of the chief circumstances of a few will indicate the character of those early years of the fur-trade on our Pacific coast.

It will be remembered that when the Spaniards withdrew from this coast and left it to Great Britain, the early port of Nootka, on the western coast of Vancouver Island, was taken possession of by the native chief Maquinna. In 1803 the port was visited by the ship Manchester of Philadelphia, having on board a rich cargo for barter with the natives. Seven of the crew deserting, placed themselves under Maquinna's protection. Shortly afterwards they attempted to desert to another chief, but were captured and put to death with great cruelty.

Another remarkable tragedy of those early rough, and often lawless, days of the Pacific coast fur trade, was that of the ship Tonquin, which took place at Clayoquot Sound, on the southwestern coast of Vancouver Island. The Tonquin sailed from New York in September, 1810, with supplies for John Jacob Astor's famous trading post, Astoria, on the Columbia river. In the following March the Tonqnin reached Astoria, and having discharged the part of her cargo destined for that port sailed northward to Clayoquot Sound, whose shores were inhabited by a powerful tribe of savages, known as the Wahen-ishes. Captain Thorn, a hard, tyrannical, obstinate man, commanded the Tonquin, and for his first officer, he had Alex. Mackay, who is will be remembered, had accompanied Alex. Mackenzie on his memorable trip across Western Canada, through the Rocky Mountains and down to the Pacific Coast.

No sooner had the Tonquin anchored off Clayoquot than natives in canoes came out to her in large numbers. They were allowed on board, and in the most friendly manner proceeded to barter furs for merchandise. But the apparent friendship was feigned, as Captain Thorn was informed by a native who had been engaged as interpreter. He told Thorn that the tribe was ill-disposed and intended attacking the ship on the following day. Thorn's obstinacy proved his ruin, for he refused to take advantage of the interpreter's warning. Of the entire crew not one man escaped and the story of the massacre was carried to Astoria by the interpreter two years later.

Following the early explorations of British Columbia, and especially explorations carried on along the coast, comes the fur-trading period, which extended over many years, and in which adventurous and often lawless men were engaged. Great profits were made in this trade, for the fur-bearing animals were plentiful and their pelts, obtained in barter at low prices from the natives, found a ready and exceeding lucrative market both in China and Europe. With good luck the fur-traders soon accumulated fortunes.

The greater part of these furs was obtained from the sea-otter, a powerful animals, sometimes four feet in length and weighing ninety pounds. In describing this animal a trader of those early days wrote: "A full grown prime (pelt), which has been stretched before drying, is about five feet long, and twenty-four to thirty inches wide, covered with a very fine fur, about three-fourths of an inch in length, having a rich jet black, glossy surface, and exhibiting a silver color when blown open. Those are esteemed the finest which have some white hairs interspersed and scattered over the whole surface, and a perfectly white head. . . Otters are sometimes seen many leagues from land, sleeping on their backs on the surface of the water, with their young ones reclining on their breasts. The cub are incapable of swimming until they are several months old. The dam will not leave her young ones in the moment of danger, and, therefore, shares their fate. . . . They are unable to remain under water longer than two minutes."

To-day the sea-otter has almost entirely disappeared from the coast of British Columbia. Writing in 1894, Alex. Begg, in his interesting history of the Pacific Coast Province says: "The number now caught on the coast is very limited."

ROADS IN CHINA.

They Are Narrow and Crooked and Edged With Ditches.

The Chinese road is private property, a strip taken from somebody's land. This is done much against the will of the owner, since he not only loses the use of it, but also still has to pay taxes on it.

One consequence is that it is wide enough for only one vehicle, and carts can pass one another only by trespassing on the cultivated land. To prevent this the farmers dig deep ditches by the roadside. As the surface wears away and the dust blows off it gradually grows lower, and after awhile it becomes a drain for the surrounding fields. A current forms in the rainy season, which still further hollows it out, and thus has arisen the proverb that a road a thousand years old becomes a river.

Those whose lands are used for roads naturally prefer to have the roads run along the edge of their farms instead of cutting across them, and this accounts for the fact that Chinese roads are often so crooked that one may have to go a considerable distance to reach a place that is in reality but a few miles away. This always interests the stranger.

Only Pursuing His Profession.

A Brooklyn magistrate recently had four darkies who were caught in a gambling raid before him. The first of the lot to be brought to the bar was an undersized man, with a comical face as black as night. The dialogue between the magistrate and the prisoner created some merriment in the court.

"What is your name?" inquired the magistrate sternly.

"Mah name's Smiff," replied the darky.

"What is your profession?"

"I's a locksmiff by trade, sah."

"What were you doing when the police broke into the room last night?"

"Judge, I was pursuin' mah profession. I was makin' a bolt for the door."

"Officer," said the magistrate, with a merry twinkle in his eye, "lock Smith up."

The Art of Overlooking.

Nobody can live long in the world and not admit that the words "nothing for nothing" contain a sad amount of truth. He is of course a fool who does not count the cost so far as the future is concerned, but scarcely less a fool is he who does not overlook past costs. If we have any good or delightful thing in this life, at all hazards let us not taint our enjoyment by considering what we gave for it. Was it more than we could afford? Never mind. We have afforded it; we have made our purchase. Let us take off the ticket with the price and burn the receipt. There are items in life's ledger which must be overlooked unless we would spend all our days in balancing closed accounts.—London Spectator.

How She Rules Him.

"Skinpblint's wife certainly has remarkable success in managing him. I wonder how she does it."

"When he undertakes to deny her anything she really wants she threatens to sue him for divorce."

"Does he care so much for her, then?"

"Oh, no. It's not that, but he figures that it is cheaper to let her have her own way than it would be to either defend the suit or pay alimony."

A Bad Start.

"A man always looks foolish when he proposes," said the frank young woman.

"Yes," answered Mr. Meekton, "and I have evidently failed to overcome the absurd impression I made on Henrietta on that occasion."

Social Paradox.

"It's impossible for me to dress on $5,000 a year."

"Well, my love, you must wear less."

"Don't be silly! You know perfectly well that the less I wear the more it costs."—Judge's Library.

BYRON AND THE BALLOON.

How the Poet In 1822 Predicted the Airship of Today.

Those who have read the fiction of Edgar Allan Poe will recall his wonderful story of the balloon with a propelling rudder, which, crossing the Atlantic from Europe in three days, landed on the coast of South Carolina. This story was published in 1838, preceding the flight of Bleriot from Calais to Dover more than seventy years. And now it is remarked that as early as 1822, sixteen years before Poe, Byron foretold the motor.

It was in 1822 that Byron lived at Pisa, Italy, where he had rented for a year the Lanfranchie palace, and it was there that he entertained a Captain Medwin, who on his return to London published his "Conversations With Lord Byron." One of these conversations is to this effect:

"Who can but regret," said Byron, "that he has been born two or three hundred years too soon. Here is a letter from a savant of Bologna who claims to have discovered the secret of guiding balloons by means of a rudder and who assures me that he is ready to disclose this secret to the government. I imagine that we are soon to make journeys through the air instead of sea voyages, at last to find a way to go to the moon despite the lack of atmosphere that Fontanelle has discovered there. There is not as much madness in this idea as one may suppose. The sciences are now in their infancy."

Medwin left Pisa in March, 1822. It was near the close of that year that Byron published the latter parts of his "Don Juan," in which the poet shows that he had been inspired by the discovery of the Bologna savant. See the second stanza of the tenth canto:

Man fell with apples and with apples rose,
If this be true, for we must deem the mode
In which Sir Isaac Newton could disclose
Through the then unpaved stars the turnpike road,
A thing to counterbalance human woes.
For ever since immortal man hath glowed
With all kinds of mechanics, and full soon
Steam engines will conduct him to the moon.

Byron's "Don Juan" was translated into French by Amedee Pichot in 1825; but, daring as was that translator, he did not venture to put "Don Juan" into rhyme, and today the foregoing stanza done in French prose is supposed to be a prediction of aviation by motor, though Byron's suggestion goes no further than steam.—London Globe.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

LIVER LAZINESS

Those Who Lack Energy and are Unsuccessful Should Read This Closely.

"I am only thirty years old, yet for almost two years I have felt more like seventy-five. I have found it difficult to sleep at night and in the morning feel so depressed and heavy that effort was difficult. My hands were always clammy and perspiration on slight effort would break out all over me. It was not unnatural that I should begin to brood over the chance that I should soon be unfit to do my work, and this dread made my sleepless nights perfect misery. After repeated trials of medicine and mixtures Dr. Hamilton's Pills gave me the first gleam of hope. From the very first I could see they were different in action from other pills. They didn't gripe and acted as naturally as if nature and not the pills were cleansing my sluggish system. My spirits rose, I felt much better, the sluggish action of the system gave way to normal activity. Dizziness and headaches ceased, appetite, good color, and ambition to work returned and have remained. I am like a new man and I thank Dr. Hamilton's Pills for it all."

This was the experience of J. E. Parkhurst, a well-known grocery dealer in Jefferson. Follow his advice, use Dr. Hamilton's Pills for your stomach, kidneys, and liver, and you'll enjoy long life and robust good health. All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, in yellow boxes, 25c per box, from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

BASHFUL STANLEY.

William H. Rideing tells in McClure's Magazine of a dinner of the Papyrus club in Boston at which Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, was the guest of honor:

"Whether he (Stanley) sat or stood, he fidgeted and answered in monosyllables—not because he was unamiable or unappreciative, but because he—this man of iron, God's instrument, whose word in the field brooked no contradiction or evasion, he who defied obstacles and danger and pierced the heart of darkness—was bashful even in the company of fellow craftsmen.

"His embarrassment grew when after dinner the chairman eulogized him to the audience. He squirmed and averted his face as cheer after cheer confirmed the speaker's rhetorical ebullience of praise. 'Gentlemen, I introduce to you Mr. Stanley, who,' etc. The hero stood up slowly, painfully, reluctantly, and, with a gesture of deprecation, fumbled in first one and then another of his pockets without finding what he sought.

"It was supposed that he was looking for his notes, and more applause took the edge off the delay. His mouth twitched without speech for another awkward minute before, with a more erect bearing, he produced the object of his search and put it on his head. It was not paper, but a rag of a cap, and with that on he faced the company as one who by the act had done all that could be expected of him and made further acknowledgment of the honors he had received superfluous. It was a cap that Livingstone had worn and that Livingstone had given him."

A Cat Operation.

"I saw something to-day that pushes the limit," said a young married man who had just returned from the cat and dog hospital. He had been there to take his wife's pet cat, that had broken her leg.

"What was that?" naturally the wife asked him.

"A cat that was being treated for a mole on its nose. There wasn't a thing on earth the matter with the animal except that it had a tiny mole. The owner of the cat, a fashionably dressed young woman heavy with furs, said it spoiled the animal's beauty. Whoever heard of such a thing? Torturing a poor cat just to have a mole removed from its nose."

WASHINGTON'S DECISION.

How the General Settled a Point of Military Law.

By EVAN C. MATHEWS.

(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

"Where are you going, daughter?"

"I am going to skate down the river toward West Point to meet Jimmie."

This bit of dialogue occurred in a house located but a few hundred yards from Washington's headquarters at Newburg.

Colonel Cogswell hastened to headquarters, where he joined the general, who was busy over reports of assistants authorized to collect commissary and quartermaster's stores. Katherine, leaving the high ground, descended to the river bank, where she put on her skates, then, with her hands in her muff, skated gracefully southward.

layed by some details pertaining to his duties, started to meet his sweetheart. He had barely reached the village of Cornwall when he saw far in the distance a dim figure which the quick eye of love told him was Katherine. There was but one other person visible to him on the ice, and that was a man who had just started from the west bank and was pursuing a course directly across the river.

Then Muldrough saw something that filled him with horror. The girl's figure, while he looked at it, suddenly disappeared. There was no obstacle between him and her, and he knew that she had skated into a dreaded air hole. Too far from her to assist her, it seemed impossible that she should escape death unless it might be that she could get her hands on firm ice. There was scarcely a ray of hope.

But hold! The man crossing the river sees the accident. He is but a short distance from the point where she has fallen. He changes his direction and skates rapidly over the 500 yards that separate them. He lies flat on the ice, drags the girl out of the water and endeavors to stand her on her feet. Presently he succeeds, and the two hand in hand, skate northward, at first very slowly, then gradually increasing their pace.

The lieutenant understood all this. Katherine's clothing was soaked with ice water, and the only hope for her was to keep the blood moving through her veins by as violent exercise as she could stand. He was skating with all his strength, but they had preceded him by too long a start for him to overtake them. He called to them, but they did not hear him. He was not far behind them when, taking off their skates, they left the river and started up the incline toward Katherine's home. Following them, he entered the house just as the man who had performed the rescue was leaving it.

The two men stopped short, each looking at each other.

"Captain Abernathy!" exclaimed Muldrough.

"Lieutenant Muldrough, at your service," replied the other.

Captain Abernathy of his majesty's cavalry had been captured in the Ramapo valley a month before and had been confined as a prisoner of war at West Point. Lieutenant Muldrough had been in charge of the prisoners at the post, had befriended Abernathy, and the two, though on opposite sides of the struggle, had formed a warm friendship. Muldrough was astonished to see the British captain under the present circumstances, for he had supposed him to be in the military prison.

"How did you come here?" asked Muldrough.

"Found an opportunity for escape, and had I not turned aside to assist a lady"—

"And save a life," interrupted Muldrough.

"I would have by this afternoon been on board a man-of-war bearing the cross of St. George on her banner. In other words, I would no longer be a prisoner of war."

"Come in. My first business is to ascertain the condition of Miss Cogswell. I shall not forget that you have saved her life." A shadow passed over Muldrough's face as he remembered that it would be his duty to return to prison the man who but for saving that life—a life dearer than all the world to him—would have regained his freedom.

The two entered the house, where Muldrough asked anxiously after Katherine's condition, to learn that she was receiving proper attention.

Meanwhile Colonel Cogswell had learned of the accident and come hastening into the house. Having been informed that everything that could be done for his daughter was being done, he turned to the two men.

"Is it to you, sir," he asked Captain Abernathy, "that I owe my daughter's life?"

"It is, colonel," Muldrough said. "Without this gentleman's assistance our Katherine would now be in the river under the ice."

"And pray, sir," asked the colonel, "to whom am I indebted for this invaluable service?"

Captain Abernathy and Lieutenant Muldrough looked at each other. Then Abernathy said:

"I will not trouble Lieutenant Muldrough to tell you that. I am Captain George Abernathy of his majesty's service and a prisoner of war. This morning before daylight I found a loophole for escape, the sentry stationed at my door being dead tired and asleep. I walked out unobserved and under cover of the darkness skirted the river north of Fort Clinton. Traversing the pass through the mountains, I stopped after daylight at a house where I found a friendly Tory, who gave me breakfast and these citizen's clothes. I was crossing the river with a view to going down on the other side to board one of our men-of-war below when I saw your daughter in peril. You know the rest."

While this brief explanation of how matters had come about was being given Colonel Cogswell's brow was darkening. He saw that the man to whom he was infinitely indebted, whom he would like to load with favors, must be sent back under guard to prison. Then, too, he remembered that the Continental army had suffered greatly from the work of spies, and recently orders had been issued that wherever such were found they should be tried by drumhead court martial and hanged. Captain Abernathy having changed his uniform for citizen's clothing brought him, according to the military code, under the letter of the law as a spy.

"Your service to me, sir, and to Lieutenant Muldrough," he said, "puts me under an obligation that is incalculable, but your kindly act has placed us in a painful position. Why, may I ask, did you not retain your uniform?"

"I could not have hoped to pass through territory in the hands of your troops in my dress as a British officer."

"Yet in assuming the dress of a civilian you risked a felon's death."

"I took my chances and lost."

Colonel Cogswell looked troubled. There was but one man who could rectify any damage that might have been done—the general in chief—and he had issued the order with reference to spies.

"There is but one hope for us," said the colonel gloomily, "and that is in the magnanimity of our noble general in chief. But what view he may take of the matter it is impossible to predict. Whether he will consider that the letter and not the spirit of his order has been violated, whether he will be willing to appear as one breaking his own law, no one but himself can decide. Come; let us go to him."

They were about to leave the room when a voice was heard at the head of the stairs:

"Papa, if it had not been for my preserver I would now be— Oh, it is horrible! I can't bear to think of it! If any harm comes to him I will never forgive you, even if you are my dear father. And you, Jimmie, if you let any trouble come to him you must give me up."

"Hush, darling!" said her father in infinite pain. "Keep quiet and keep warm. You should not have been permitted to overhear our conversation."

"I am glad," said the British captain, "that I have heard your daughter's words. If I must pay the penalty of the risk I assumed I shall be comforted by them."

The three men left the house and walked to the headquarters of the general in chief. Washington rose as they entered and, advancing to Colonel Cogswell, pressed his hand, asking eagerly after the condition of his daughter. After assuring the general that she was in no immediate danger he said:

"And now, general, I have to introduce the man who has preserved her to us, Captain George Abernathy of the British army."

General Washington's face changed from sympathy to curiosity, then assumed a serious cast. "And how comes it," he asked, "that Captain Abernathy is not in uniform?"

"Lieutenant Muldrough," interposed the colonel, "will explain."

Muldrough told the story of Abernathy's capture, their friendship, Abernathy's escape and timely coming upon Katherine Cogswell. General Washington listened till he had finished, and the three men stood awaiting the general's decision. It did not come at once, but when it came it was spoken with the decision of a commander:

"Captain Abernathy, there is no evidence other than your clothing that you are a spy. There is sufficient evidence that you are not. I shall send a flag of truce to the commander in New York asking him to nominate one of our captains in his possession of the same rank as yours to be exchanged for you. Meanwhile I will accept your parole to remain with us, and I shall be happy to have you and Colonel Cogswell and Lieutenant Muldrough dine with me today."

ON THE VERGE OF BREAKDOWN

When You Think Yourself Only Out of Sorts You are Often Seriously Ill.

Thousands are just on the edge of the crater—just ready to topple in the crater of ill-health and nervous breakdown. Such was the case with Mr. E. E. Follett, a well-known figure in all business social circles of Grand Rapids.

"I had not been well for a year or more. I had lost in weight and could not pick up. I tired of my work—it seemed like drudgery—no pleasure in it like there used to be. When I got thin, I seemed to have little blood and my hands and feet were clammy and cold. To make matters worse I grew nervous—got irritable and worried over mere trifles. I tried dieting and various medicines, but profited by none of them. I was on the verge of a breakdown when my druggist recommended 'Ferrozone.' It wasn't very long before I felt it was a true blood and nerve builder. I was encouraged so much after the third box that I got six boxes more. In seven weeks I gained six pounds and was looking the picture of health. Ferrozone has made a new man of me."

QUEER INDIAN BELIEFS.

The Five Worlds of the Bella Coola Sun Worshipers.

There is an odd feature in the theology of the small Indian tribe of the Bella Coola which inhabit British Columbia in about latitude 52. They believe that there are five worlds, one above the other, and the middle one is our own world, the earth. Above it are two heavens, and under it are two underworlds. In the upper heaven is the supreme deity, who is a woman, and she doesn't meddle much with the affairs in the second world below her. The zenith is the center of the lower heaven, and here is the house of the gods, in which live the sun and the rest of the deities.

Our own earth is believed to be an island swimming in the ocean. The first underworld from the earth is inhabited by ghosts, who can return, when they wish, to heaven, from which place they may be sent down to our earth. If then they misbehave again they are cast into the lower of the underworlds, and from this bourn no ghostly traveler returns.

The Bella Coola are sun worshipers, for Senex, the sun, the master of the house of gods, who is called the father and the sacred one, is the only deity to whom the tribe pray. Each family of the Bella Coola has its own traditions and its own form of the current traditions, so that in the mythology of the tribe there are countless contradictions. When any one not a member of a clan tries to tell a tradition which does not belong to his clan it is like a white man trying to tell another's joke—he is considered as appropriating the property right which does not belong to him.

Cause of Thought.

"You look thoughtful tonight, Smith," remarked Brown as he stretched himself on two chairs.

"Yes," said Smith. "I have just got a note from the landlady."

"What does she say?"

"She says that I must pay my board at once or her daughter will sue me for breach of promise. I'm thinking what I'd better do."—London Tit-Bits.

RESOLUTION VS. CHEQUE.

A Story of the Late Sir George A. Drummond.

Mr. Robert Bickerdike, M.P., in paying a tribute to the memory of the late Senator Drummond the other day, told the following story:

"Sir George Drummond was an able man. He had a great mastery of figures. I have had many business dealings with him and found him strong and able. And in his position as chairman of the Banking Committee, he rendered good service."

There is a story in which he figured as a young man, when he was secretary of the Redpath Sugar Refinery, and which connects him in an amusing way with the late "Barney" Devlin.

Nothing amiss at all with the connection; but I do not think it is generally known.

The Redpath people wanted to get a new charter through at Ottawa—a charter organizing the company into a limited liability concern.

"Barney Devlin was asked to put the thing through. The latter did the business in good shape, and Sir George, then plain Mr. Drummond, meeting Barney after the job was done, took him by the hand and said: 'You have done splendidly. You must have put a great deal of work and trouble into the job. Our directors meet to-morrow, and I am sure they will do something for you which will please you.'

"Barney looked forward with interest, for he was rather hard up at the time—excellent fellow that he was.

"The next day Barney received an envelope which he thought contained a cheque. When he opened it he found that it contained a resolution of thanks and appreciation passed by the board of directors.

"Barney used some strong words and put the resolution in his pocket. He went to the Bank of Montreal and asked Mr. King, the then manager, for the loan of $300.

"'Sorry I can't do it,' was the reply. 'We have loaned you money before and you have not paid us. Very sorry. Of course, nothing against you, Barney, but you know I have directors to face, and business is business.'

"'Faith, I can,' said Barney, pulling out and presenting the fine resolution.

Mr. King looked at it and handed it back.

"'Not worth a d——.'

Barney was turning to go out when he met Mr. Drummond.

The latter shook him warmly by the hand.

"'Did what we did yesterday please you?'

"'Do you mean the resolution? Why, Mr. King says it's not worth a d——.'

"'Bless me,' said Mr. Drummond, 'it cost me nearly an hour to draft.'

A Le Roi Mine Romance.

In 1892 Maurice Yenzil, a merchant of Moscow, Idaho, sold a suit of clothes for $60,000, writes Harold Sands in "Romances of Rossland" in the February Canadian Magazine.

Of course there is a story in that transaction, and a wonderful story it is; nothing less than the romance of Rossland and its mines. Yenzil didn't get his $60,000 down on the nail. It was five years before he received the final payment on that suit of "hand-me-downs."

Truth to tell, Yenzil did not expect to get a cent for the clothes. One day an acquaintance he had known in various mining camps of the West wandered into his store in Moscow dressed in his best and his worst. In other words the man's clothes were much the worse for wear, but they were all he had.

"Just come down from Rossland, broke," he explained to his friend the merchant. "I've got nothing except these 2,000 share of Le Roi gold mine. Give me a suit of clothes and stake me to a meal and they're yours."

Yenzil did so, and threw the certificate for the mining stock into the back of his safe. He was out a suit of clothes and "four-bits"; that was the way he figured.

By 1897 he had received in dividends and from the sale of the stock the sum of $60,000. The great Le Roi mine, after nearly breaking the hearts of those who stood so splendidly by it in the days of adversity, had first developed into the most prominent property in British Columbia, and then had been bought by the British company headed by the late Whitaker Wright, of somewhat painful memory.

When the Americans who held the mine disposed of it to Wright for about $4,000,000, Yenzil cashed in for that suit of clothes.

Ragman Wit.

Last autumn a Toronto lady got a taste of real Russian Jew repartee. One morning a strange dog drifted into her back yard, and, stretching himself under the shade of a fruit tree, died. The problem of how to dispose of the beast was worrying her. A little later she was picking flowers in her garden when a rag and bottle man drove by and stopped.

"Any rags?" he called in his Yiddish dialect.

"No," said the lady.

"Any bones or bottles?" he persisted.

"No; go away," said the lady tartly.

"Any oldt boots?" he went on. "I give five cents each for oldt boots."

"No; please go away," said the lady. Then a thought flashed upon her. Perhaps he could use the dead dog in his business. Perhaps the hide would be worth his taking. So she said:

"Do you want a dog?"

"Yah!" cried the man, jumping off the wagon; "where iss idt?"

She took him around to the back of the house and showed him the unwelcome guest. When he found that the animal was dead, he flew into a spluttering rage, and as he raced back to his wagon he hissed at the lady:

"Don't you vandt idt? Don't you like idt? Don't you vandt idt to eedt?"

With this crushing retort, which would be a most savage and significant insult among his own people, he drove hissing away.

F. P. Vaughan, an Englishman employed by the B. C. Electric Railway, took his life at Vancouver.

SMOKING IN OLD TIMES.

How Tobacco Has Been Fought by Persecution.

Smoking is now a popular custom, with no one around to visit penalties upon its indulgence. Though America owes more to tobacco than any other country penalties were invoked here more harsh than anywhere else. Laws were passed permitting its growth in small quantities and then only as a necessity for medicine to be taken privately by old men. New England colonists were not permitted to use it or to purchase it in a tavern. No man was allowed to smoke tobacco publicly, nor in his own house in the presence of strangers. In some townships a medical certificate had to be procured before a man might even smoke at all.

King James the First of England became so incensed against the habit that he issued an edict stating that tobacco was loathsome to the eye, hateful to the nose, harmful to the brain, dangerous to the lungs, and in its black, ill-smelling fumes the nearest resemblance to the horrible Stygian smoke of the bottomless pit.

This sovereign tried to abolish its use by imposing heavy penalties and in 1619 ordered that no planter of Virginia should cultivate more than 100 pounds. This did not stand long, for its disuse made such a hole in the imperial treasury as to produce a marked shortage in the Government's revenue. Some of the wealthy, however, consumed as much as 400 pounds of tobacco in a year.

Queen Elizabeth of England abhorred tobacco, issued an edict against its use and said Englishmen should not follow the example of the savages who introduced the custom in America.

Persia fought it in 1590 and when the Shah prohibited its use many of his subjects fled to the mountains rather than give in.

In 1634 Russia forbade the peasantry to smoke under penalty of having the nose cut off. The law was kept in force for nearly 150 years. Yet within the century since the decree was abolished the peasantry of that country have become the greatest smokers in the world.

Turkey bore hard against it though it is to-day strongly addicted to its use. For a long time any Turk found smoking in Constantinople was punished by having a pipe transfixed through his nose, and, seated on an ass, with his face towards the tail, was conducted through the streets, subject to the ridicule of the people.

What French Folks Eat.

The French breakfast is invariably the same—a bowl of cafe au lait and bread and butter. It is the only time in the day when butter is given to one. At noon one is served with fish and bread without butter, or a vegetable and bread. At night there will be soup, a bit of meat, whatever vegetable was cooked in the soup, and wine. Wine is the common beverage of the country, but it is no heavier than lemonade. The poorer people do not live so well as this. They have bread and cafe au lait or chocolate for breakfast and for supper, and a salad (which is the cheapest of all foods there), or pot-au-feu for the meal of the day. Dandelion is served as a salad, and never cooked.

Two Cases.

The clerk of arraigns on assize was swearing the jury when a juryman said:

"Speak up! I cannot hear what you say."

The presiding judge asked him if he were deaf.

"Yes, my lord, of one ear."

"Well," responded the judge, "you may go, for it is necessary that jurymen should hear both sides."

Another judge, however, on a like objection, said:

"Oh, let him be sworn. We only hear one side of a case at a time."

Tommy to the Rescue.

Tommy's idea of punishment is being sent up to the school principal's room.

When he went to Sunday school the well-meaning teacher asked him if he knew where bad little boys go.

"Yes, sir," Tommy promptly responded.

"And do you know about the terrible being who rules there?" the teacher went on.

Tommy stared in surprise.

"Gee," he indignantly cried, "our principal ain't so bad as that!"

Tactics.

"Is there any portion of the fowl you prefer, major?" asked the hostess blandly.

"The left wing, if you please."

"The left wing?"

"Yes," returned the major, gazing dubiously at the platter. "I believe it is always good military tactics to bring the left wing of a veteran corps into action."

Thrifty.

"I am a poor man."

"When we are married I can learn to cook."

"Hadn't you—er—better begin practice," suggested the thrifty suitor "while your father is yet supplying the raw material, so to speak?"

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

Many Peterborough men are not attending the theatre this week as they are having a song and dance at home as a result of the Easter millinery bills.

The 57th band of Peterborough is thinking of breaking away from the regiment and donning kilts—a most bare-legged proceeding. Is also classed as "one of the finest and best known in Canada." Hang it! Where is Peterborough, anyway?—Hamilton Spectator.

A Chinaman named Him Sing has been fined at Ottawa, and it can be pretty nearly taken for granted that Him won't sing.

Everything has gone nicely in Peterborough this spring, including the snow.

These are the days when a man wonders how in blazes so much stuff accumulates in the back yard.

17 YEAR OLD BOY HEARS WITHOUT A TREMOR THE SENTENCE OF DEATH PASSED UPON HIM

ROBERT HENDERSON WILL PAY THE DEATH PENALTY FOR HIS HEINOUS CRIME

Condemned Man Showed Marvelous Self Control When the Court Pronounced the Sentence---Walked From Prisoners' Dock Unassisted and With Steady Stride.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23RD, THE DAY OF EXECUTION

The Jury Deliberated an Hour and Fifteen Minutes--Strong Recommendation to Mercy Incorporated in Verdict---Judge Charged Strongly Against Prisoner

A confirmed criminal of the most incorrigible and hopeless type could not have shown any more outward absolute indifference if arraigned for a petty theft than juvenile, smooth-faced, 17-year-old Robert Henderson did yesterday afternoon when Mr. Justice Riddell pronounced upon him the most terrible judgment of the British court—the sentence of death. Henderson stood in an easy, confident attitude when the sentence was given—not an attitude of defiance or overconfidence—for, while he seemed cool and undisturbed, his demeanor was not impudent or forced.

According to the sentence of the court, Henderson will meet his death in the Peterborough jail yard in the early morning of June 23rd, for a crime that is one of the most atrocious and cowardly in present day criminal history. Realizing this as the appaling death sentence was passed upon him, one could not help but feel that the law was unrelenting but just, and yet, on the other hand, one could not but feel keen sympathy for the fatherless boy, whose short span of life will be spent in close confinement without even the comfort of the members of his family, and with a speedy and terrible death upon the scaffold as a termination to a life that is just approaching the threshold of manhood.

ABSOLUTE SELF-CONTROL.

When the young prisoner knew his fate he turned around in the prisoner's dock and faced the door of the box waiting for the turnkey to unlock it. When the door was opened he stepped out of the box, and, with the turnkey following him, walked down the short corridor towards the cells. He didn't falter or reel under the awful blow that had often prostrated men of iron nerve, and a reserve of feeling under trying circumstances bred from habitual appearance in the dock and the receiving of heavy penalties of the law.

While the turnkey was unlocking the door that gave entrance to the cells, the prisoner took a casual glance around, and then stepped inside to await under the vigilance of the death watch the day of the execution of the fatal sentence.

A RAY OF HOPE.

There is a possibility, however, that the sentence may not be carried out. The jury coupled with the verdict of guilty a rider that strongly recommended executive mercy on the boy's behalf. The judge said that he would forward the recommendation for mercy to the Department of Justice at Ottawa, and would also personally recommend that the clemency of the Minister of Justice be extended the prisoner.

The expert testimony of Dr. Clarke, of the Hospital for Insane, Toronto, and of Dr. R. Bruce Smith, provincial inspector of prisons and public charities, was to the effect that the prisoner was a moral degenerate, and absolutely indifferent to right or wrong. At the same time they said that his intellectural faculties were alert and that he would realize the nature and quality of his act when he committed the assault upon the two old ladies. It would seem that mental unsoundness would be the only grounds on which a commutation of the sentence could be granted, and in order that this might be fully considered, the court did not name the day of the death penalty at the usual six weeks from the time of sentence, but placed it on June 23rd instead.

REVIEW OF THE CRIME.

The crime for which Robert Henderson is under the sentence of death is one that has attracted widespread attention and aroused strong feeling on account of its particularly inhuman character.

On January 28th, 1910, Henderson called at the little home of the Misses McPherson, two maiden ladies—Susana, aged 64, and Margaret, aged 74—residing two and a half miles east of Norwood, on the Belmont or Havelock road, around eleven o'clock on the morning of January 28th, and asked concerning the whereabouts of his brother, giving the latter's name as John Thompson. He was told that nothing was known of the brother and went up the road a short distance, presumably to make inquiries. He returned a few minutes later and got something to eat, paying ten cents for the meal. At the conclusion of the meal he again went out, but in five minutes or so returned, picked up the axe, which was lying at the woodpile in front of the door, and swung it on the head of Margaret McPherson, who was sitting at the head of the table, near the door. He then clubbed Susana with the axe, inflicting a bruise on her arm that caused that member to swell abnormally, and the blow glanced to her head, inflicting a serious gash. The elder of the two women had her skull crushed, and although her condition gave encouragement to the physicians in attendance for some time, her vitality was at too low an ebb to withstand the shock, and she died on February 20th.

When the assault took place Susana McPherson screamed so loudly that Henderson became alarmed and ran away. The neighbors were soon at the scene of the assault and a posse of farmers and section men pursued Henderson along the C.P.R. tracks to within a short distance from Havelock when he gave himself up to Constable Bennett of that town. He was lodged in the Havelock lockup and later brought to Peterborough, where he was remanded by County Police Magistrate Edmison from time to time pending the outcome of the injuries to the old ladies and when Margaret McPherson died he was taken to Norwood and committed for trial by Magistrate Edmison.

The doctors who attended the injured women and those who performed the post mortem testified at the trial yesterday that in their opinion the old women's death was due to the violent blow given her by Henderson.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, who worked indefatigably in the interests of the penniless youth, tried to establish that death might have been due to other causes but the physicians, while they admitted that there was a remote possibility of such being the case were of the decided opinion that the axe wound was responsible.

URGED IRRESPONSIBILITY.

At the resumption of the session of the court yesterday afternoon Dr. Sutton was recalled by Mr. F. D. Kerr concerning a point about the pressure of the skull on the brain.

At the conclusion of his testimony Mr. Kerr commenced an earnest and sympathetic plea on behalf of the prisoner. He said the boy was the son of a sick woman, and an heir to all ages of what had gone before him—insanity, suicide and epilepsy. If it was a crime for some men to commit murder, that was a crime that was heinous. But if that was a crime, what a crime it would be for the jurors through lack of investigation or pluck to bring in a verdict not true to the evidence.

After getting his dinner and paying for the meal, Henderson returned to the house and picking up the axe, the poor, deluded man hit the old woman over the head. What of the occurrence?

There were things that we knew and felt, but could not prove. The crime was committed without reason or sanity. The thought suggested itself to a poor, deluded boy that there was money in the house. The idea occurred to him of the old ladies hoarding up their money.

Henderson was the offshoot of an unfortunate family whose record was in the morning read in court. If the jury acquitted the prisoner on the grounds that he was mentally unbalanced he would be committed to the penitentiary or the asylum to await the pleasure of the Lieutenant-Governor. The doctors stated that Henderson's moral imbecility could never be cured.

Mr. Kerr argued that the plea of insanity should be very seriously considerred and then spoke of the possible causes other than the assault that might have been responsible for the old lady's death.

Mr. Du Vernet, K.C., the Crown prosecutor, said he would not address the jury.

THE JURY'S DUTY.

Justice Riddell in his charge to the jury said he would say what to a large extent had been said time and again and would be repeated time and again as long as human nature remained the way it was. The jury had to throw aside all prejudices and sympathies and find a verdict according to the evidence only.

The law that the court was going to lay down to the jury was the law of the British Empire for generations and they were bound to accept the law as the judge interpreted it. If his interpretation of the law was wrong there was a higher court to correct him.

THREE POINTS TO DECIDE.

The young prisoner apparently between 17 and 18 years of age was defective from birth. In the Old Country, according to his own story he had been stealing and was imprisoned there for that offence. There were three points to which the jury should direct its attention; first, was that the man had struck the blow. According to the evidence of Susan McPherson he did and other testimony was offered to that effect.

The second point to consider was; did the woman die from the blow? every doctor who saw Miss McPherson, and who performed the postmortem examination, said that the blow was the cause of death.

A great deal had been said about the motive, but in law that has nothing to do with the quality of the act. But if a motive had to be found did they have to go any further than the man's own story?

THE INSANITY PHASE.

The medical evidence had been largely aside from the point in question but they should bear in mind that the life of a human being might be at stake.

His Lordship warmly congratulated Mr. Kerr for his thorough defence of a penniless man.

The jury was not trying to question of whether the prisoner was an epileptic or weak-minded. The law didn't allow insane men to run amuck and kill whomsoever they would. A man might have natural imbecility and still be responsible before the law. The law would hold him responsible for the act he did unless his mind was diseased or impaired to such an extent that he did not know the character or quality of the act. It didn't make a straw's difference if all this man's ancestors from Noah down were insane. Because a man was a moral imbecile he wasn't held irresponsible by the law. Every doctor that was questioned on the point said that the prisoner could appreciate the quality of his act.

Although the law could not be changed there was a higher tribunal of appeal that could temper justice with mercy.

VERDICT OF "GUILTY."

The jury retired at five minutes to five and brought in a verdict at ten minutes after six.

"We find the prisoner guilty and would add a very strong recommendation of mercy," said Foreman R. Cottrell of the jury, in response to the question of the clerk as to what verdict had been reached.

WILL BE RE-EXAMINED.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said His Lordship, "I think you have done your duty as honest men and as honest citizens of this country. Painful as may be the verdict you have found it is the only righteous one. The rider you have added is a credit to your humanity."

The judge remarked that there was no pleasure in giving a death sentence or in imposing any chastisement. The recommendation to mercy would be forwarded to the proper authorities with a recommendation of his own. He would ask the authorities at Ottawa to have the prisoner's condition investigated again by the highest medical authorities. He knew his case would receive the most anxious and careful consideration, and the jury might be quite sure that no man would be put to death unless the authorities were thoroughly satisfied that the law would have to take its course.

The court thanked the jurymen for their services, and for the careful manner in which they had watched and weighed the evidence.

JUDGE ADDRESSES PRISONER.

"Robert Henderson, stand up," said the court. "Have you anything to say why the judgement of the court should not be passed upon for this criminal offence of which you have been found guilty?"

"No, my lord," replied the prisoner in a steady, audible voice.

"You, Robert Henderson, have been convicted of the heinous crime of murder. The case was perfectly plain. The defence was a very able one, and everything possible was done for you."

His Lordship, continuing, said that the case had appeared a hopeless one unless the medical evidence could show that the prisoner was not in a condition at the time of the crime that would justify the jury in finding that he was not responsible for his actions at the time of the assault.

The prisoner had not governed himself by the law of God or man, and had preyed upon the charitable instincts and good heartedness of his fellow men. He had received punishment for that in England, but had not become a better man. He was characterized as a degenerate—a moral imbecile.

The prisoner made up his mind to leave England and come to this country, the arms of which were open to any man willing to make an honest livelihood by honest means.

"On this unlucky 28th of January, led by what motive we cannot tell, you went to the only house in the neighborhood where unprotected women were, and apparently thinking they must have money, made up your mind to get that money, even at the expense of their lives.

"You tried to kill one of them and succeeded, and tried to kill the other but failed. You also tried to kill one of your pursuers, but, thank God, that also failed.

"'Being found guilty of murder, the law allows me to inflict only one penalty—death.'"

His Lordship said he intended to set the time of the execution at a later date than was usual under similar circumstances in order that the prisoner might realize the gravity of his position and listen to spiritual advice, and he would forward the jury's recommendation to mercy and his own. But the unfortunate boy was warned not to expect any clemency for such an act.

THE DEATH SENTENCE.

The judge then put on the black cap and said:

"The sentence of the court upon you, Robert Henderson, is that you be taken to the place from whence you came and there be kept in close confinement until Thursday, June 23rd, 1910. On that day you will be taken from thence to the place of execution, and there hanged by the neck until you are dead; and may the Lord have mercy on your soul."

NORMAL SCHOOL INSPECTOR IS NEW HEAD OF THE O.E.A.

R. W. Doan is Again Secretary and W. J. Hendry is Treasurer—Convention Goes on its Way Merrily Knocking Many of the Present Educational Methods.

Toronto, March 31.—With still increasing enthusiasm the delegates to the Ontario Educational Association went through the various meetings of their different sections yesterday. Revolutionary statements were uttered all along the line, condemning different phases of the educational methods at present adopted by the schools throughout Ontario. A breaking away from the hard and fast routine methods and forms was protested against by many able speakers.

At last evening's session of the O. E. A. Convention the new officers of the association for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, Inspector F. W. Merchant; general secretary, R. W. Doan; treasurer, W. J. Hendry. All the new officers are Toronto men.

The new president, Inspector Merchant, has been a teacher in the high schools at Ingersoll, Owen Sound and Barnia. On leaving Barnia he was appointed principal of the Normal School at London, where he remained till about one year ago, when he was made inspector of normal schools.

Dr. Balliet lectured once more last evening to the delegates on "The Problem of Moral Education."

Another interesting address was given to a joint meeting of the association in Convocation Hall yesterday afternoon by Dr. Balliet of New York University, on the "Function of Play in the Life of the Scholar."

The speaker referred to fighting, running and hunting as inherited instincts handed down through generations to children from their remote ancestors. The lad of seven who runs away from home is merely following the roaming disposition of some of his predecessors. Dr. Balliet stated that the biological theory of play was that it was a rehearsal of ancestral customs. The kitten seizes a ball in its four paws, and the puppy with its teeth." In both cases they are adopting the methods used by their ancestors.

When boys fight and play roughly they are merely finding an outlet for their inherited instinct. Playing football is merely following a strong racial instinct, but sawing wood is a modern convention, and as yet has not registered itself on the nerve centres. Boys' marble-playing in April and kite-flying in September are as certain as the migration of the birds, and are, from practically the same cause.

Physical exercises in a gymnasium are called work because they are based on physiology and anatomy. Wild animals exercise at play when they are young and at work when as they grow older. If the state were so organized that every child had ample opportunity to play and every adult had to do work enough to earn his meals, it would do much toward keeping the race in a healthy condition. He argued that the best forms of play were those in which the child was allowed to follow his or her own racial instincts.

THE THIRD CONVICTION FOR MURDER

Death Sentence Has Only Been Passed Twice Before in Peterborough.

James Fox, Alias William Brenton, Was Hanged at Local Jail on December 26th, 1875, for Double Murder.

James Farley Was Convicted on Murder Charge, But Death Sentence Was Commuted to Life Imprisonment

The passing of the death sentence on Robert Henderson recalls the one other occasion in the history of Peterborough County when the extreme penalty of the law was carried out for the crime of murder. On December 26th, 1875, James Fox, alias William Brenton, was hanged in the yard of the Peterborough jail for the murder of Jane Payne, wife of Jeremiah Payne, and of David Doughty, a fourteen-year-old boy, who was a relative of the Paynes. The double murder, which was referred to at that time as one of the most atrocious in the criminal records of the Dominion, took place on November 12, 1872, in Dummer township, near Stony Lake, about twenty-five miles from Peterborough. Three years before the murder Jeremiah Payne was married to Jane Myles, and they resided in Dummer township in a somewhat isolated spot not far from the shore of Stony Lake. A daughter was born born to them about a year after the marriage. David Doughty, the boy who was murdered, was visiting the Paynes at the time of the tragedy. Six months before the murder took place a man between forty and fifty years of age had appeared in the township and was given employment as a farm laborer by Mr. Payne. On the day the murder was committed Payne had gone to a neighbor's to assist in some threshing operations, leaving Brenton at home working on a root-house. Mrs. Payne, her little daughter, and the boy Doughty were also at the Payne home. In the afternoon Brenton went to the place where Payne was threshing and asked him to pay him forty dollars wages due him, as he wished to leave. Payne told him that he would settle when he went home at night, and Brenton went away in an unpleasant frame of mind.

When Payne returned home at night he was greeted by a terrible sight. His wife was lying dead on the floor of the little house with her head battered to a pulp, and her throat cut. A pick had been used to crush her head, and it was lying beside the body. The knife with which her throat had been cut could not be found. Payne's shouts attracted the attention of some men who had been with him at the threshing, and who were on their way home, and they were soon at the Payne home. A search was made and the body of Doughty was found near the root-house with his throat cut from ear to ear. In her cradle behind the door of the house the little girl was peacefully sleeping, unharmed and unaware of the terrible crime that had been committed.

Brenton was captured the next day near Peterborough and was committed for trial at the spring assizes. The prosecuting attorney was Mr. J. D. Armour, of Cobourg, (afterwards Chief Justice Armour). The prisoner was supplied counsel by the Crown, his lawyer being Mr. Boultbee, of the firm of Boultbee, Fairbairn and Poussette, of Peterborough. Insanity was the plea of the defence, and in order that an investigation might be made in this connection the trial was left over till the autumn assizes, at which Judge Wilson presided, and at which the prisoner was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged on December 11th. At the trial his name was given as James Fox. The execution was postponed till December 26th on account of another investigation in connection with the insanity plea being made. It was futile, however, and on the morning of December 26 Fox was hanged on a scaffold that had been erected in the jail yard. The hanging was witnessed by only a few officials and the representatives of

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING

The tariff concessions to the United States agreed upon by the Laurier Government are more far reaching than the newspaper reports sent out from Washington during the past ten days indicated. If made permanent they would seriously hamper the development of a number of lines of industry for which Canada is naturally well adapted, and which might eventually become of great importance to the country if properly protected.

Something for nothing
Will profit you nothing,
And nothing will never buy bread.

Two countries begin tariff negotiations. One has a very high tariff, the other a low tariff. Instead of the country with the high tariff lowering its duties to the level of the other to encourage trade, the country with the low tariff makes further reductions. That is certainly a rather queer situation, and a somewhat humiliating one for Canada, especially as it came about so soon after our Government had announced to the whole world that Canada would "stand pat" and not allow the United States to dictate its tariff policy.

Fortunately when the Conservatives come into power the whole complex tariff system of the Laurier Government can be replaced by a simple system treating all foreign countries alike and giving adequate protection to Canadian home industries.

WEAK POINT IN GLOBE LOGIC

The Toronto Globe says:—"To carry out the delusive simile of a favorable or unfavorable balance of trade to its logical conclusion a merchant would put a tax on all his purchases to lessen them and thus increase his profits."

The weakest point in The Globe's reasoning is that it imagines a nation is an individual. A nation is not an individual. It is made up of many individuals. An individual cannot trade with himself, but the many individuals who make up a nation can trade with each other, or they can trade with individuals who form part of another nation. Supposing that the trade is naturally profitable to two traders if they belong to the same nation, the country in which they live gets the whole of the profit, but if they belong to different nations the benefit is divided between the two countries. Thus home trade is twice as profitable to the country as foreign trade.

However, owing to the difference of climate and natural resources, the people of two countries may often profitably exchange products. Thus Canada cannot grow oranges, and the countries that grow oranges cannot grow good apples, which Canada produces to perfection.

PUBLIC MORALITY AND PRIVATE LIFE

Every citizen who has a family of children growing up should consider what effect the tolerance of corruption in the management of public affairs may have upon the private morals of the people—upon the morals of his own children, for as boys and girls become men and women their characters are greatly affected by the standard of morality of the community in which they live. There cannot be two standards of morality, one for public and one for private life. If we allow dishonesty in public affairs to go unpunished, if men who plunder the public treasury by such devices, for instance as classifying clay as solid rock, continue to hold the highest positions in the nation and are treated everywhere as if they were honorable men, what effect will it have upon the private morals of the growing nation? What influence will it have upon your own boys and girls, or upon the children of the many immigrants who are coming into the country every day? Will they think it is honorable to be dishonest? Will they suppose that trickery, untruthfulness, deception, bribery and misappropriation of public funds are commendable?

Canada is a country of wonderful natural resources—in increase of population and of wealth it will almost certainly surpass every other country during the twentieth century. But of what advantage to the nation will be all this great accumulation of wealth if the morals of the people become rotten?

WILL PETERBOROUGH STAND STILL?

The most important question for the men who manage the affairs of Peterborough is, "How can we increase the number of manufacturing industries of the city and encourage the further development of those already here?"

The city council, the water commissioners, the city trust commissioners and the Board of Trade should all give this problem the most earnest consideration. There is no conflict of interests between the water commissioners and the city council. They represent the same people, and all the people whom they represent will be benefited by the development of manufacturing industries.

Canada will make wonderful progress during the next ten years. The Northwest is being rapidly settled and New Ontario will before long have many thousands of prosperous farmers, who will require large quantities of manufactured goods.

The growth of many of the manufacturing towns and cities will be marvellous, but they will not all grow at the same rate. There are towns and cities in this province which have made almost no progress during the last twenty-five years, towns which at one time in their history made very rapid progress. They came to a standstill while others were moving on. Will it be so with Peterborough during the next ten years, or will we have a record of progress of which every citizen may feel proud?

DANGEROUS DANDRUFF

Will Make Canada a Bald Headed Nation if Not Checked

M. Pasteur, the great French Physician of Paris, once said: "I believe we shall one day rid the world of all diseases caused by germs."

Dandruff is caused by germs, a fact accepted by all physicians.

Dandruff is the root of all hair evils. If it were not for the little destructive germs working with a persistency worthy of a better cause, there would be no baldness.

Parisian Sage will kill the dandruff germs and remove dandruff in two weeks or money back.

Wm. Madill guarantees it. It will stop itching scalp, falling hair and make the hair grow thick and abundant.

It puts life and lustre into the hair and prevents it from turning gray.

It is the hair dressing par excellence, daintily perfumed and free from grease stickiness. It is the favorite with women of taste and culture who know the social value of fascinating hair.

A large bottle costs only 50 cents at leading druggists everywhere, and in Peterborough by Wm. Madill. The girl with the auburn hair is on every package.

Canadian Westinghouse Company's profits last year were $498,379.94.

MONTREAL, March 30.—(Special.)—At the Canadian Pacific market offerings were 300 cattle, 60 sheep and lambs, 250 hogs and 1500 calves. Sales of selected lots were made at $10.25 to $10.50, weighed off cars. Calves are coming forward freely and prices are tending lower. A brisk trade was done at from $3 to $8 each. Played Dog, May Die.

Woodbridge, March 31.—Tuesday evening a young boy named Wilcox made an attempt to play a practical joke on another boy called Sleightholm. Both boys work for John Peacock. Young Sleightholm had come to the village to get a cast for a drill, and, when he was returning home, Wilcox hid under a culvert, and, when Sleightholm came up, jumped out and crawled on his hands and knees, barking like a mad dog and snapping at his heels. It was quite dark, and Sleightholm, thinking it was a dog, swung the iron around with force, hitting Wilcox on the head. Wilcox's head was split open and the skull fractured.

Banks Hard Hit by Failure.

Montreal, March 31.—It is estimated that the failure of D. Rattray and Sons, Limited, involves liabilities of between $300,000 and $400,000. A large amount of this is in the form of accommodation paper held by banks. The Sovereign Bank is interested to the extent of about $80,000. A warrant has been issued against D. John Rattray and W. J. Lefeave, who was the chief clerk in the Montreal office.

"As yet."

He made no response.

"As yet," she insisted.

"As yet, if you like," he smiled.

"Ah, well, I've no more time to talk of it," she sighed, picking up her gloves from a small table. "I must be off. I suppose you know," she continued, glancing up at him sidewise, "that there'd be a fight. The doors wouldn't be flung open to you as, for instance, to my brother Ludovic."

Winship shrugged his shoulders and said nothing.

"And so in the end you might fail."

"I couldn't fail," he answered quickly, "not now. However it turned out the victory would be mine—now. In the one case Paul Trafford would carry a wound in his side; in the other he'd get it in the heart."

Lady Alice paused, with her glove half drawn on, and regarded him.

"Humph!" she sniffed at last. "I believe you Winships are Corsicans, after all—you and Marah too."

CHAPTER IX.

At the Pavilion d'Armenonville, in the Bois de Boulogne, it was the crowded hour of the afternoon, all the more crowded because the day was one of those in early spring when it seems a rare pleasure to sit out of doors under the foliage still too tender to keep off the grateful warmth of the sun. In the long gallery and beneath the trees there was such a movement of going and coming, such a rustle of silks and satins, such a hum of talk and laughter, such a calling of greetings and farewells, such a tinkle of cups and glasses, that two ladies seated by themselves could be intimately alone. Lady Alice had foreseen this when she invited Paula to tea with her.

"Yes, Ludovic will be back again in a few weeks," Lady Alice sighed as she put down her cup. "Poor boy! I hope the trip will have done him good."

"I'm sure I hope so," Paula murmured politely.

"He sails from Cape Town tomorrow. That'll make it about three months altogether since he left Monte Carlo."

"About that, I think," Paula murmured again, trying to look anywhere but at her hostess.

"Of course," Lady Alice ventured boldly, "I never asked him what took place between you. I wouldn't. I think one can never be too delicate about matters of that sort. But naturally one has one's surmisings, don't they? I thought—you'll excuse me, dear, won't you?—I only thought that if it was anything in the nature of a misunderstanding"—

"It wasn't anything of that kind," Paula forced herself to say.

"Well, I'm glad of that, or, rather, I can't help being a little bit sorry, too, because, if it had been so, there might have been a ray of hope for Ludovic. But of course if you'd made up your mind that you couldn't marry him"—

"I offered to," Paula stammered in the hope of putting the matter less ungraciously. "I wanted to, but the duke thought I had better not."

"Oh!"

Lady Alice's dry tone indicated her astonishment.

"He seemed to think I didn't love him well enough."

"And didn't you?"

"He wouldn't let me try."

"Were you ready?"

"Yes—to try."

"Well, it's never too late, you know."

The swift rose color came into Paula's cheek, while she fixed her troubled eyes on the farthest point they could see—a swan at the distant end of the lake.

"Look here, my dear," Lady Alice said, assuming a kindly, elderly tone, "let me warn you of one thing—don't trifle with love. I'm an old maid, and you may think I don't know anything about it, but I do. I've had my experiences, like other people, and once, when I'd seen the man I could have given my heart to, I wouldn't. I wouldn't because he was only a barrister and I was Lady Alice Holroyd, and I thought I couldn't come down. I've been bitterly punished, I assure you, for I've thought of him ever since, and he's been lord chancellor too. Don't trifle with love, dear. It's the most precious gift of life. It comes to us once, and if we refuse to take it it passes us by, never to return again."

The ending was so impressive and the Hungarian music sobbed so despairingly that Paula's lip trembled.

"And so, dear," Lady Alice went on, pursuing her advantage, "you mustn't let Ludovic think you don't love him enough if you do."

"Oh, but I don't!" Paula said hurriedly,

"You said you could try."

"I could have tried then. I can't now."

"Excuse me, dear," Lady Alice exclaimed, twisting her mouth into a sympathetic smile. "I'm talking about what I have no business to. There! I shall say no more about it. I'm sorry I began. I shouldn't have done it only that I know so well what love means when it has once come to us and—gone on. Being Ludovic's sister, I thought— But, no; let's talk of something else. By the way, I went over to call on the Winships yesterday, and I saw your portrait. It's superb."

"I'm glad you like it."

The new, bright color in Paula's face might have sprung from mere pleasure in the success of the work.

"'Like it' isn't the word. It's a splendid work of art—that's what it is, my dear—and you know that I don't speak on the subject without knowledge. That man has something in him that none of our other young painters has got, and he'll go far, you mark my words. I can't think how you ever came to happen on him."

"It was my cousin, Mrs. George Trafford, who suggested my having it done."

"She's very philanthropic, isn't she? Oh, yes, I see! She got you to sit to him out of a spirit of benevolence."

"Not that exactly,"

"Well, you've done a very good thing in any case. He tells me it's to go to the Salon, and if so his reputation is made. How do you like him?" she ended abruptly.

"Like him? How?"

"As a man. You see, I've mothered the whole family, so to speak, in times past, and so I have an interest in him. How do you think he seems?"

"Oh, very well!"

"Only that?"

"No; I wouldn't say only that."

"He struck me as very good looking."

"He seemed so to me."

"And I thought him very determined and manly, and so on. Of course I knew he was. He's always been so. They've had such a hard time, you know, or perhaps you don't know, but he had a man's pluck even when he was a boy. Now the worst of that will be over for them since you've given him such a lift."

"I'm very glad," Paula said, just audibly.

"And you've done him another good turn. I don't know whether I ought to tell you or not."

She laughed lightly, and Paula lifted her eyes full of inquiry.

"I don't see why I shouldn't tell you," Lady Alice went on, as if with inward amusement. "It can't matter to you after all the admiration you've had."

"Please don't," Paula begged.

"Why not? It isn't anything to you, and to him it's like electricity to the wire. You know what artists are. They never seem able to do their best work until they've found some one who appeals to their imagination as an ideal. Dante wasn't anything until he saw Beatrice even though he lived to marry Gemma Donati."

"Please don't go on, Lady Alice. It makes me feel—ridiculous."

"Oh, you know what I was going to say? Then I might as well stop. I thought I might be telling you something new, but of course you must have seen it long before I did. What's the matter, dear? You look as if you were going to cry. For mercy's sake, don't do it here, where you'll attract so much attention."

"I'm not going to," the girl managed to say.

"That's good, but have I offended you? No? What can it be, then? Is it— Oh, no, it can't be! It's too impossible. It's too absurd. It can't be. Upon my word, I believe I'm like the farmer's wife who went out to look for hens' eggs and found a pot of gold. Paula, my dear, when you said just now that you couldn't try again to love Ludovic was it because"—

"Yes." The word slipped from Paula's lips, though she would have given anything to keep it back.

The sobbing gypsy air rose higher and higher till it ended in a clang like the breaking of the strings of a thousand harps.

"Ludovic is safe, thank God," she thought, "and so is Roger! I've done a good day's work."

CHAPTER X.

During the spring the first golden laurel leaves of popular attention began dropping into Winship's studio. Before his work was finished he knew it was receiving that measure of respect which comes from being talked about. Up to the present his reputation had been confined to friends, critics and connoisseurs. Now his name was to pass from mouth to mouth, out from the narrow circle of those who know a good thing to the broader world which must be told where to look for it. In the prophetic hints with which the great journals herald the approaching Salon there were frequent hints of a new young artist of extraordinary ability and the portrait he was painting of Mme. Trafford, la richissime Americaine.

It was the first puff of the trumpet of celebrity, and in it Paula's name counted for much. The fact caused her an uneasiness which increased as her father remained longer away. For the first time in her life she had taken an important step without his knowledge. For the first time in her life she had concealed something from him and hesitated still to make it known. The project undertaken as one of private benevolence had become a matter of almost public interest. As the girl saw her name in print side by side with Winship's she dreaded lest some stray paragraph should fall under her father's eye. It was chiefly with a view to avowal that she secured the privilege of going alone to meet him at the station on the day following her talk with Lady Alice at Armenonville.

"Papa, I've something to confess to you," she began as the victoria descended one of the long, populous thoroughfares leading from the Gare du Nord. The crowd, the street cries and the rumble of traffic gave her courage. She felt less likely to fall into the emotional.

"Fire away," he said good naturedly.

"I've been having my portrait painted."

"What! Again? Well, that is a crime. There will be no pardon for it unless the guilty object is forfeited to the state—and l'etat, c'est moi."

"You mayn't want it when I've told you all. It has turned out to be a very remarkable work."

"That's against it, of course."

"I didn't think anything about it, as a portrait, when I began, but Lady Alice Holroyd says it's very striking and sure to make the artist's reputation. The newspapers have said so too."

"Ah, well, that's a pity! But one can't always keep one's name out of the papers, worse luck."

"And I've promised him to let it go to the Salon."

"You might have hesitated a little there. You were in the Salon last year and the year before. You don't want to be taken as an annual, dear."

"No. I thought of that. I shouldn't have done it for my own sake. But I was anxious that he should have whatever advantage he could get from showing it."

"Who's—he?"

"He's a friend of Lady Alice's. The duke introduced him to me the first evening you took me to the Casino at Monte Carlo. After we came home George told me who he was and what connection his family had had with ours."

"What's his name?"

"That's what you mayn't like, papa."

"Well, it's his name, dear, I suppose, whether I like it or not. I didn't baptize him, so I'm not responsible."

"It's Winship."

"Surely not old Rog"—

"Yes, papa, the very same."

"The devil it is! Why didn't you tell me that before, dear?"

"I suppose I should have done it if you hadn't been away."

"But I wasn't beyond the reach of letters, dear, and you wrote nearly every day."

"The truth is, papa, darling, that I was afraid you mightn't approve of it."

"TOO ILL TO WORK"

In Deepest Despair—All Run Down—Health Was Restored.

When you are sick and undecided as to the best remedy to use, there is nothing so convincing as the personal experience of some one who has suffered like yourself.

From St. Francis, Maine, comes the following statement from Mrs. Ovila Daigle: "I want to write you a few lines in order to tell you how much better my health is since taking Ferrozone.

"For two years I was weak.
"Couldn't do any housework.
"Was tired, worn out, depressed.
"Thought I wouldn't recover.
"Since using Ferrozone I have grown strong enough to attend myself to the family washing. I have seven children and a husband, and am doing all the housework myself. I still use Ferrozone, and seem to gain better health all the time."

THIRD CONVICTION FOR MURDER

the cross. The murderer never confessed, and went to his death protesting his innocence. His talk showed that he was rambling in his mind. Among other things he claimed that Mrs. Payne had put hairs in the flour used for making the bread which he was given to eat, and that it had made him sick.

The lieutenant of Fox was sent from Toronto by the government. Sheriff Hall was sheriff at the time, and was in charge of the arrangements for the execution.

It was announced at the time of the murder that Fox was a native of Sidney township, Hastings county, and that he had worked as a clerk in a store at Belleville when a boy. He went to the United States and served in the northern army during the American Civil war. It was claimed that his mind had been affected by a blow received on the head during the war. He was reticent about his past life, and would not disclose the whereabouts above of his relatives.

The body of the murderer was interred in the jail yard at Peterborough. Dr. Kincaid was the coroner at the time and presided at the inquest held after the deaths of Mrs. Payne and the boy Doughty.

The child of the Paynes who was sleeping in the cradle when her mother and David Doughty were murdered, is still alive, being an inmate of the House of Refuge at Lakefield.

GOT LIFE SENTENCE.

Several years ago on the Market Square a young Philadelphian by the name of James Farley, an employee with Howe's circus, which was in the town at the time, shot an Indian named Elijah, who died from the effects of the wound, and Farley was found guilty of murder. His sentence was commuted to life imprisonment, however, and after serving twelve years in Kingston penitentiary he was allowed his liberty a couple of years ago or so, being an ideal prisoner. The prisoner was twenty years of age at the time he was taken to the penitentiary.

TRANSFORMATION EFFECTED AT MONTGOMERY HOTEL

The changes which have been made at The Cavanagh House, now the Montgomery Hotel, amount practically to a transformation. From the cellar to the top floor the renovation and improvements have been general and the result is that it is one of the most tastily fitted up and conveniently arranged hostelries of its size in the Midland district. Mr. James Montgomery, the proprietor, is an experienced and thorough hotelman and is to be commended for the excellent taste he has shown in his ideas in connection with the improvements to the hotel.

In the rotunda new oak chairs have been placed and the furnishings generally have been replenished. The woodwork in the new bar is of solid oak with dark finish and while there is a noticeable lack of loudness about the bar ornamentation the best of judgment is indicated in the selection of materials and in the decorative embellishments.

The most important part of an hotel from the guest's standpoint is the dining room. Mr. Montgomery has been especially discriminating in the selecting and blending of the paper and tint for the dining room which has a very bright and inviting appearance. The cuisine is also under most able direction and the new proprietor intends to conduct a dining room that will meet the demands of exacting guests. The commodious kitchen is equipped with a fine new range and here as everywhere else in the hotel absolute cleanliness is a noticeable feature.

The fine workmanship of the decorators and furnishers is probably more in outstanding evidence upstairs in the hotel than any other place. The floors and woodwork have been richly finished in dark stain, the walls and ceiling have been brightened by paper of an artistic pattern and the floors have been handsomely carpeted. New beds have been placed in the bedrooms and they have also been refurnished throughout. The large guest's parlor in the front of the house on the first floor upstairs is very comfortable and homelike.

Every arrangement has been made also to meet all the requirements of the rural trade. There is plenty of yard room and additional stable accommodation will be provided.

The heating equipment of the hotel was supplied by Mortimer and Reid and Adamson and Dobbin did extensive plumbing. The papering, painting and graining was in charge of Mr. Ralph Carton. F. D. Craig and J. C. Turnbull & Co. supplied the furniture and carpets and bedroom furnishings. The silverware and kitchen range were purchased from Adam Hall, Tait Bros., Toronto, supplied the bar fixtures and Mr. James Montgomery, the local carpenter, had charge of the carpenter work in connection with the improvements to the hotel.

BOTH "GEISHA" AND MADRIGAL CLUB FOR COMPETITION

Dr. Vogt was apparently very favorably impressed with the showing made by the rehearsals of "The Geisha" and the Conservatory Madrigal Club on the occasion of his visit here last Monday. This morning Mr. R. J. Dewey, the organizer and director of the Geisha company of local amateurs received a message from Lt.-Col. Septimus Denison, Toronto, honorary secretary of the Earl Grey, trophy competition, to the effect that the operatic company and Madrigal Club had both been accepted as entrants for the competition.

"The Geisha" will be performed on Tuesday and the Madrigal Club will take part in the competition on Thursday.

To have two organizations from a city of 16,000 take part in a competition of such importance is a decided tribute to the city.

HENDERSON IS CIGARETTE FIEND

Henderson, the condemned youth, is an inveterate cigarette smoker. After his arrest following his long chase on the C.P.R. track from the scene of the crime to Havelock, he asked Constable Bennett to give him a match to light a cigarette. When he was being brought from Havelock to the Peterborough jail in company with six other prisoners he seemed to take no notice of the immense crowd that jammed the Havelock platform, but requested Inspector Reburn to get him a package of cigarettes and the latter bought them at the station. He smoked practically all the way up to Peterborough and was the least concerned prisoner in the coach.

In the court yesterday he wore a suit of dark material, the same suit he wore when arrested. He had on tan boots and didn't wear a collar, adopting the unconventional neckwear of a handkerchief cravat.

CONFERENCE BEING HELD

A conference is being held this afternoon between Frederic Nicholls, vice-president and general manager of the Canadian General Electric Company, and the Peterborough City Council in connection with the proposition to sell the C.G.E. the surplus power at the new waterworks dam. Negotiations have been in progress for several weeks, and it is probable that a bargain may be struck to-day. Full details of the conference will be published in to-morrow's Review.

Leaving Omemee

Omemee, March 30.—Dr. J. F. Snelgrove and family remove this week to Toronto, where the doctor has secured a promising city practice. Their departure is a distinct loss to Omemee, where Mrs. Snelgrove was an advocate and exponent of high-class vocalism, and where the doctor enjoyed the confidence of an extensive practice.

Gladstone's Magnetism.

The magnetism with which Mr. Gladstone always seemed to invest his words is illustrated by the following curious little story. At Hawarden the conversation once turned to walnuts and Mr. Gladstone, in a pause, said in thrilling tones, "I have not eaten a walnut since I was a boy of sixteen"; and then added, in a cadence of melancholy dignity, "nor, indeed, a nut of any kind." "The auditor who told me the story," says Mr. Benson, "said that the remark was received like an oracle, and that he had for the moment the impression that he had been the recipient of a singular and momentous confidence, such was the magnetic force of the speaker. The effect, I used to think, was augmented by the forcible burr with which the letter "r" was pronounced, which gave a curious richness to the whole intonation."

A Well-Guarded Bank.

The Bank of England is considered to have one of the most nearly impregnable vaults of any bank in the world. It is sixty-six feet below the level of the street. Above it is twenty feet of concrete, holding seven feet of water, and below the same concrete barrier and depth of water. In this manner tunneling becomes impossible, while with the soldier guard posted every night the conservative Briton has reason to believe in the security of his "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street."

IMPROVEMENTS TO COURTROOM

Are Suggested by Mr. Justice Riddell- Too Much Noise

Mr. Justice Riddell hasn't a very high opinion of the construction of the court room at the Peterborough court house. He stated yesterday afternoon that owing to the construction of the room the spectators walking in and out made a great deal more noise than was desirable. The architect, in designing the room, His Lordship thought, had evidently a theatre in mind, rather than a court room. The benches should be placed on a level instead of an elevation, thus doing away with steps and large empty spaces that gave service to so much noise.

The rearrangement of the benches and the separation of the Grand and Petit Jurors from the spectators,

TOO MUCH NOISE CAUSED BY PERSONS ENTERING AND LEAVING THE COURT ROOM

Grand Jury Recommend That Some Action be Taken to Remedy the Trouble—Uniforms for Court Constables Suggested—Institutions Found in Satisfactory Condition

To His Lordship Mr. Justice Riddell:

May it please Your Lordship.— The Grand Jury for the county of Peterborough at this sittings of the High Court beg to present as follows:—

We are pleased that we can join with you in congratulating this country on its prosperous condition. This county has undoubtedly shared in the general prosperity, and the conditions of business and manufacturing in the city shows that it is participating in the progress and advancement of the Dominion. Canada is to be congratulated as well on the character of its people and institutions, and the high standing, impartiality and integrity of its courts of justice are among the most potent influences that it possesses for building up a country on a sure foundation. The people can rely upon our judges, and we are pleased to say that Your Lordship having frequently attended court in Peterborough, and being known to us, we know that you occupy a conspicuous place among our learned and able Justices.

As directed by you, we visited a number of the public institutions. At the jail we found fifteen prisoner's in confinement, among them five who seemed to have been committed there on account of poverty. We understand that the city of Peterborough is taking steps to provide more accommodation for its poor, and we would recommend that such provision be made as soon as possible. We are pleased to say that the jail and everything about it was in good condition and the prisoners well cared for. During our inspection we noticed that the railings on the verandahs at the entrance to the County Judge's chambers and to the jailer's residence were out of repair, and we recommend that the attention of the proper authorities be called to this. We would compliment the county on the manner in which the Judge's Chambers have been decorated and fitted up, and also on the fact that preparations are being made for heating the Court House building with steam.

At St. Joseph's Hospital there were thirty patients at the time of our visit. This hospital is well equipped and gave evidence of being carefully managed and looked after, as did also the adjacent House of Providence, in which fifty-one persons found a comfortable home.

The Protestant Home had thirteen inmates, and here again we found everything well kept. We have been informed that the Government Inspector is not satisfied with the building used for this Home and has notified the management that the Government grant will be withdrawn in consequence, but the old people there are very comfortable and well cared for, and we would respectfully suggest that this decision be reconsidered.

The St. Vincent's Orphanage as a new home established by the Roman Catholic church for children. It is a handsome building with spacious grounds, has separate apartments for boys and girls, and is admirably adapted for its purpose. There were in it fifteen boys and fourteen girls at the time of our inspection.

The Children's Shelter, given to the Children's Aid Society by the city, contained twelve children. It is a comfortable home and was clean and everything about it in good order.

The Nicholls Hospital also showed evidence of careful management and close supervision, and in this spacious and well-equipped institution forty-eight patients were being treated.

Lack of time prevented us from visiting the County House of Refuge, which we regret, but it is not long since a Grand Jury made a very favorable report upon this benevolent institution.

We would recommend that some action be taken by the county to overcome the noise caused by the public entering and leaving the court room, and also that the court constables be provided with proper uniforms.

Respectfully submitted.

HARRY PHELAN,
Foreman.

FIELDING MADE CONCESSIONS TO AVOID A TARIFF WAR

Thirteen Classes of Imports Directly Affected and an Omnibus Clause Affecting Many Others — Reductions to be Extended to Other Countries.

Ottawa, March 31.—Canada has made concessions to the United States after all to secure the continuance of the United States minimum tariff and to avoid the imposition of the maximum tariff in its place.

But, according to the Minister of Finance, the arrangement will hurt no industry in Canada; does not give the United States any particular preference—because the concessions are granted in the general tariff and will apply to the whole world; will have no convenient effect on the revenue, and, as a matter of fact, serves a very useful purpose indeed.

"No doubt," said Mr. Fielding, "extremists on both sides will have the extreme view as to this arrangement. I have no doubt that some will say the United States have the best of the bargain. In both cases I believe they will be wrong.

"In so far as the best kind of bargain is one where both sides met each other in good spirit and are satisfied that the spirit of compromise has prevailed, I believe it is a good thing for Canada, and that it is a good thing for the United States."

Mr. Fielding said he had every reason to believe that President Taft, although sincere in his kindly references to Canada, had not been bluffing, but that, had Canada declined to do something, he would have had to impose the maximum duty.

And while this might have been avoided, and Canada emerged with a diplomatic triumph, such a course would only have created an ill-feeling that would have reacted unfavorably in some future negotiations.

Mr. Fielding emphasized the fact that the United States, although desirous of getting concessions concerning the exportation of wood pulp, had not insisted on these when it was explained that it was a matter for the provinces to decide.

Reductions are made in thirteen classes, containing about forty items in all. The average reduction is about 3 1-2 per cent., that is, the average difference between the general tariff under which American goods have entered Canada hitherto, and the intermediate tariff under which they now enter.

The concerted items constitute about $5,000,000 of Canada's American importations. These goods are, many of them, goods that are not extensively or at all produced in Canada, and the reduction will go to reduce the prices on dates, figs, and nuts, toilet articles, perfumery, tableware china, window glass, watch actions, sheet feathers and millinery supplies.

The concessions provided by the agreement cover less than three per cent. of all the import business from the United States into Canada in a year.

They will cover business amounting to about $5,000,000 against imports into Canada from the United States, amounting to more than $180,000,000 in the Canadian fiscal year of 1909. They include about forty staple commodities.

One of the most important concessions made by Canada is that of the so-called omnibus clause in the tariff. Heretofore all articles under that clause imported from the United States have been subject to the general tariff of 20 per cent. ad valorem. Hereafter these articles will pay 17-1-2 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. Fielding concluded by praising Ambassador Bryce for the assistance he had rendered, and by reading the correspondence between himself and Mr. Knox.

Mr. Sproule, acting leader of the Opposition, expressed surprise that the Government had not demanded concessions of some kind for what had been given.

W. F. Maclean congratulated the Government upon the settlement of the waterways treaty which he hoped would be beneficial to both countries, and that Canada would get her fair share in the division. He also congratulated the Government on the settlement of the tariff difficulty and the avoidance of a tariff war. He pointed out, however, that this settlement could only be temporary, and that Canada must prepare to face a similar situation in the near future.

Want Closer Trade Relations.

Washington, D.C., March 31.—Following the proclamation of a complete tariff agreement with Canada yesterday, it was announced that President Taft has invited Dominion Government officials to a conference looking to closer trade relations between the two countries and to a general readjustment of duties.

Writing Hon. Mr. Fielding, United States Secretary Knox says:

"I am gratified that the recent tendencies toward a more perfect understanding between our respective countries, manifested so conspicuously in the maturing adjustments of boundary waters, fisheries, and other long-standing differences, will not be affected by the irritations which would have resulted from our failure to agree upon the tariff question.

"The President is confident that the policy of broader and closer commercial relations with Canada will receive the hearty support of the large majority of the people of the United States, and he has learned with much satisfaction of the existence of a similar sentiment in the Dominion. It may be added that the conditions of the present day, as contrasted with the traditions of the past, are bringing into clearer light the truth that not only mutual trade in this, but ethical and social conditions of the highest moment reinforce this common sentiment.

"Let me then take this opportunity to express, by his direction, the desire of the President, that your Government, at such times and in such manner as may be mutually satisfactory, the consideration of a readjustment of our trade relations upon the broader and more liberal lines which should obtain between countries so closely related geographically and racially as indicated by the President in his recent public utterances."

Adis Abbeba, Abyssinia, March 31.—Menelik II., King of Abyssinia, is dead, at the age of 66 years, and in the 21st year of his reign. The king was stricken with apoplexy last fall and never recovered his health.

Prince Lidj Jeasu was proclaimed heir to the throne on May 18 last. He is fourteen years old and little less than a year ago was married to the granddaughter, aged seven years, of the late Emperor John and niece of Empress Taitou.

The ancient Empire of Abyssinia or Ethiopia, includes the Kingdoms of Tigre, Amhara, Shoa, with other territories and dependencies. Its area is over 200,000 square miles and the population is estimated at between 9,000,000 and 11,000,000.

Menelik claimed to be a direct descendant of Solomon by the Queen of KING MENELIK.

Sheba, and styled himself "Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah, Elect of the Saviour, King of Kings of Ethiopia."

He was the son of the King of Shoa, but was captured in his youth by the governor of Kondar, who had usurped the throne, under the title of Theodore III.

Menelik made war on Theodore and his successor, the Emperor Johannes. He finally married his daughter to the Ras Area, the emperor's son, and was tacitly acknowledged heir to the throne. Ras Area died, Johannes was killed in battle and Menelik became Negus of Abyssinia.

He refused to acknowledge the domination of Italy over his country, and compelled the Italian army to capitulate at Adowa in 1896, when a treaty was signed recognising the absolute independence of Abyssinia. Since then peace has crowned Menelik's policy towards foreign powers and the country has prospered with the introduction of improved methods of government and commerce.

Elaborate Aerial Project.

Washington, March 31.—A line of airships of the Zeppelin type to ply between New York and London via Pekin, is proposed by A. Brodbeck, president of the Aero Club of Utah, who says he is already negotiating with Count Zeppelin.

He has been advised that it could not be done unless Congress should specify airships as one of the means of transportation.

Coughs, Colds Bronchitis

If there is an ailment in the throat or chest, it is surely essential that the remedy be conveyed direct to the affected part. It's because the healing vapor of Catarrhozone is breathed into the sore, irritated throat and bronchial tubes, because its balsamic fumes kill the germs and destroy the cause of the trouble. These are the reasons why Catarrhozone never yet failed to cure a genuine case of Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, or Throat Trouble.

The wonderfully soothing vapor of Catarrhozone instantly reaches the furthest recesses of the lungs, produces a healing curative effect that is impossible with a tablet or liquid, which goes merely to the stomach, and fails entirely to help the throat or lungs.

To permanently cure your winter ills, your coughs, sneezing and Catarrh, by all means use a tried and proven remedy, like Catarrhozone. But beware of the substitutor and imitator. Look for Catarrhozone only. 50c and $1, at all dealers. 10

AN EXPERT TO INVESTIGATE COAL LANDS

Toronto, March 31.—Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, while he is inclined to take a conservative view of the reports of coal discoveries in New Ontario, has decided, in view of the importance of the matter to the province to send an expert to make investigations.

It is not news to the department that coal exists in the valleys running into James Bay. As a result of the statements of geologists and explorers, a Government expedition was formed some years ago, under the leadership of Dr. James Mackintosh Bell, to examine the district.

They reported a number of outcrops of lignite on the Missinaibi, Missoweeka, Opazatika, Kuatabonagan and Abitibbi.

On the Abitibbi, in particular, the quality of the lignite was reported as being excellent, but the quantity uncertain.

So far as the department is aware, no authenticated statements have been received as to the existence of bituminous or anthracite coal."

Thawing Dynamite Exploded.

Sherbrooke, Que., March 31.—The boiler-room and its contents at Johnson's asbestos pits, Black Lake, were destroyed when fifty pounds of dynamite exploded. He warned his fellow-employes to run for their lives and returned to try and extinguish the fire. Slight hopes are entertained of his recovery.

About 200 pounds of dynamite was stored in boxes about 15 feet from the boiler-room, but did not explode, owing to it being frozen.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

ABBIE BEN ADHEM.

Abbie Ben Adhem, pretty as you please
And dressed as neatly as one ever sees,
One day was absent when her friends began
To turn such absent ones beneath their scan.
"She paints!" vowed one and sadly shook her head,
"She flirts!" another, with a shudder, said.
"I've heard that so and so and so and so," a third
Declared, and all cried, "Well, upon my word!"

And so in half an hour poor Abbie's fame,
As well as reputation and once honored name,
Was torn to tatters, and her friends declared
She was the sort by whom fool men were snared
And that if they were she they'd have more pride
Than to give cause for rumors undenied

In fact, they came to the conclusion then
That Miss Ben Adhem should not be again
Held in their friendship as she once had been,
But that she should be spurned with glances keen
And that, while some reports might not be true,
Of course "a person never really knew!"

The next day these same friends met to compile
A list of those who should be asked to while Away an afternoon at tea and whist,
And each one then prepared her lengthy list,
Suggesting who to ask and who to snub
For it, you see, was an exclusive club.

And who, think you, was most important guest?

His Cue.

Supers on the stage are responsible for a great many amusing incidents and Mr. Gerald Lawrence, the London actor, told a particularly good one recently. He was conducting a rehearsal, and at one point of the play, where there is a general assembly of soldiers and courtiers, one of the supers lagged behind. "Why didn't you get off with the others?" cried Mr. Lawrence. "You saw them all go." The man looked confused for a moment, then said, "Well, sir, it wasn't the same cue as I 'ad when I played in this piece afore." Now there could only have been one cue so Mr. Lawrence said, "Really! Well what cue did you have before?" "Well, sir," came the reply, 'it was like this: the gentleman as used to stand behind me used to turn round and say, 'Get off, you idiot!'"

Inducements to Servants.

From the plaintive phraseology of their advertisements, one infers that Australian housewives are confronted with a crisis in the problem of domestic service. One offers "plenty of outings"; another throws out the bait of "Sunday free"; while a third goes one better with "Saturday afternoons and Sundays off."

GOWNS AT THE OPERA

Mrs. Clarence Mackay's Gorgeous Italian Costume.

VOGUE OF THINGS RUSSIAN.

The Song of a Hat Sung to an Old Maid by Her Too, Too Honest Milliner—The Very Best of New Year Resolutions.

Dear Elsa—Dick gave me for one of my Christmas presents a season ticket for matinee performances at the Metropolitan Opera House. Clever of him, wasn't it? You know, he is bored to death at anything heavier than the airiest kind of filmy musical shows, and I—well, I simply can't get through the year without my grand opera dissipation. So we split the difference—he goes to one of his pet shows or plays golf on these Saturday afternoons, and I "invite my soul" to musical numbers of a higher order. Last Saturday was a field afternoon, and society turned out in its best frocks to hear Geraldine Farrar in "Tosca."

A SMART RUSSIAN BLOUSE SUIT.

All the leading Metropolitan sopranos are fighting for a chance to sing the title role, but the plum went to Geraldine this time. I won't bore you about the music. You know the score much better than I do, and really I must "fess up" and say that the gowns interested me as much as the opera. Mrs. Clarence Mackay's Italian costume was a stunner. The overdress was of copper beech satin bordered with copper embroidery powdered with jewels. The underdress was made of bloom of apricot satin, and over all was a heavy stolelike effect of dull copper embroidery fringed with small balls of bronze. Her big picture hat was of copper velvet with bronze plumes.

These picturesque daytime frocks are charming, and another gown that was much remarked on the same occasion, worn by a debutante, was made of satin the color of ripe corn, with a tunic of an opalescent greenish shade of iced absinth. The front consisted of a panel of embroidery in which gold, silver colored beads and pearls were worked into fanlike designs, these in turn being embroidered with dainty roses in white silk floss. Even the ancient tabard, which dates back to Chaucer's day, is being made to serve as a model. The tabard originally was a loose, short sleeved garment worn by knights over their armor, and the fact that it was usually embla zoned with the coat of arms of the wearer brings it right up to date in the present demand for embroideries.

As my seat is away out of the box holders' class, I had arrayed myself on this afternoon in my best new street frock, the good looking Russian costume I've sketched for you. Every thing in the dress line is of the Cossack variety this year—that is, everything that isn't middle ages or Louis something or other. My coat is a Russian affair of dull mauve velvet bordered with skunk and so fashioned that considerable width is given to the shoulders, while my waist appears especially small. The dress is of mauve cloth exactly matching the velvet coat, and my hat is a beauty, a marked down French model, one of Georgette's creations, the smart Paris milliner of the Rue Scribe. My dear, I got that dear thing for $20, and its price at the beginning of the season was $50. Every year about this time M. & N. sell off their model hats, and I captured a prize this year, a smart little turban of mauve velvet bordered, like the coat, with skunk and at the side a natty cockade of dull gold. What I really wanted was a love of a hat of black pressed beaver, a slashing big affair, but madame simply put her foot down and cried in her sweet fashion that it was too young looking.

The Honest Milliner.

Fortunate indeed is the woman whose milliner is brave enough to be frank with her. If you have such a genius, dear, in your town don't become angry with her for telling you the truth about what you should and should not wear. She will be disagreeable at times, her honesty may not tickle your ear, but it is more than likely that it will have a salutary effect upon your appearance.

These brutally frank people aren't great discoveries as friends, but you have a wonderful asset when you find one for a milliner.

Marjorie X. tells a funny story about herself and a milliner of the honest type. You know that Marjorie, although past her first youth, is not yet dependent upon spectacles and a shoulder shawl.

It seems that she burst in one day upon her milliner and informed her that she had a fine idea.

"I'm going to have a hat to wear in the evenings," she said, "for times when I'm just wearing my suit and not really dressed up—a hat that will give an air to a plain blue broadcloth suit and sort of top it off with a bit of dash.

"It's to be of white beaver," she announced, "big, round, and it's going to have on it something very simple—a hat of a single idea, you know. Let me see—a great big bow of black velvet!"

"Fine!" said the milliner.

Thereupon the milliner looked her square in the eyes and said, "Anything but light blue on an old maid."

And the milliner was just right, wasn't she? I don't know why it is but the average old maid turns as naturally to the wearing of light blue as a flower does to the sun. Perhaps she hopes to catch some of the reflected loveliness. But the fact is that light blue is a color to be avoided by the woman whose cheeks have lost their curves.

I am getting awfully critical, a defect in my character which I resolve the new year shall completely uproot so I'm not going to take any chances right now of breaking my promise to myself. Write and tell me about your good resolves, which in every case seem only to be made to break. Devotedly yours, MABEL.

DRAMATIC SCRAP BOOKS.

A New Hobby of Girls Who Keep Up to the Minute.

Have you a collection of old playbills? Almost every girl keeps them either as a kind of dramatic trophy or as a record of the plays she has seen. Some even keep a written list of plays, with slight comments on them, but none of these little theatrical hobbies has the real value or the absorbing interest of the dramatic scrap book.

The best kind of book to buy for this purpose is a large sized brown paper leaved scrap book with heavy covers. Its pages should not be gummed, as that will leave you no choice in placing in it such things as you wish to keep. The pages should be of good, stout paper, and in paste for gluing there is nothing quite like a bit of gum arabic to fix things firmly and keep them free from discoloring marks.

Paste each playbill into the book on the left hand page and use the page opposite to this for illustrations of the play. You will be sure to come upon magazine notices of any play that is worth chronicling, and these are always well supplied with pictures of the scenes of various plays as well as individual actors in the casts. Your playbill illustrated in this way will be a permanent record of the representation, and it will recall the scenes and setting of the play, the costumes and the characters and bring back vividly to mind the actors and the drama.

But this is not all. There should be some good criticism of each play recorded. You can find these in the newspapers or magazines, and they are a valuable addition to the illustrated pages.

As the book grows fuller it will include many other bits of dramatic interest, leading articles concerning the theater, biographical sketches of well known actors, even an autograph collection, if you chance to belong to that species of scrap book fiend. You may place in your book the plays that you yourself witness or you may record all that is of larger significance. You may devote your scrap book to modern representations of Shakespearean drama. In short, your choice in making your book is its personal significance. The scrap book pictured here is a good illustration of this. It was made by a schoolgirl to record all the plays that were worth seeing during the season.

Yes, the play's the thing, but the next best thing is to make a dramatic scrap book that will record the play.

QUEER INDIAN BELIEFS.

The Five Worlds of the Bella Coola Sun Worshipers.

There is an odd feature in the theology of the small Indian tribe of the Bella Coola which inhabit British Columbia in about latitude 52. They believe that there are five worlds, one above the other, and the middle one is our own world, the earth. Above it are two heavens, and under it are two underworlds. In the upper heaven is the supreme deity, who is a woman, and she doesn't meddle much with the affairs in the second world below her. The zenith is the center of the lower heaven, and here is the house of the gods, in which lives the sun and the rest of the deities.

Our own earth is believed to be an island swimming in the ocean. The first underworld from the earth is inhabited by ghosts, who can return, when they wish, to heaven, from which place they may be sent down to our earth. If then they misbehave again they are cast into the lower of the underworlds, and from this bourn no ghostly traveler returns.

The Bella Coola are sun worshipers, for Senex, the sun, the master of the house of gods, who is called the father and the sacred one, is the only deity to whom the tribe pray. Each family of the Bella Coola has its own traditions and its own form of the current traditions, so that in the mythology of the tribe there are countless contradictions. When any one not a member of a clan tries to tell a tradition which does not belong to his clan it is like a white man trying to tell another's joke—he is considered as appropriating the property right which does not belong to him.

LABOR LIFTS.

Small cold cream jars and the like, if scalded, make excellent containers for jelly which at some time or other you will desire to place in a lunch basket.

If you are beginning to have trouble with your feet, bathe them often, powder them freely, rub alcohol on them occasionally. Give them careful attention until you discover the sort of treatment they respond to.

Never remove a child from its bed at night and carry it about the room because it cries, for, besides being a bad habit, this is likely to give the child a cold, and if a child once knows it will be allowed to get up if it cries peace will be banished from the bedroom.

The purple stains caused by handling a typewriter ribbon may be removed from the hands with a cloth wet with pure alcohol. This treatment saves the necessity of a prolonged scrubbing and is far less injurious to delicate fingers. What a comfort this knowledge will be to the stenographer whose ribbon must always be changed just about the end of the day!

You do not have to rip the garment to be dyed, except in the case of lined coats. Place the clothes in cold water, bring to a boil, change the water several times as the old color comes out, then, having previously brought the dye to a boil in the wash boiler, as directed on the package, wring out and immerse the garments and boil for from fifteen to thirty minutes. Where your cloth is silk and cotton mixed use first the dye for cotton, then that for silk. Rinse in cold water, wring gently by hand and iron before quite dry. Needless to say, have your clothes line in the shade.

If overalls become very much soiled with paint, place a pound of salsoda in a bucket partly filled with hot water and place the garment in and fill up with water. Allow this to remain so for, say, two days, when the overalls may be examined and scraped at the part most soiled, and if it's soft to the cloth remove to clear water and rinse out, after which place on a board and lay the legs flat. Then with clear water and brown soap and a scrub brush scrub until all the paint is removed, though a stain may remain By this method the dirtiest overalls some that will stand alone, may be made very white, and the cloth will not rot at all. The process may be repeated many times.

AN INTERESTING JOURNAL.

Conducted For the Benefit of Russian Thieves and Vagabonds.

"This is the age of specialization in journalism as in other things the world over," says Spencer Kerr, a widely-known English journalist. "Nearly every trade or profession has its organ. But in the ancient city of Moscow, where I spent several weeks last year, an editor has discovered an entirely new field for newspaper enterprise which appeals to a numerous clientele. His paper, which made its first appearance not so long ago, is called Bostaska Gazeta, which, interpreted, means The Barefooted Man's Gazette. It is a little weekly journal, consisting of one double sheet of printed matter. It is ostensibly run by thieves and vagabonds for the benefit of their kind.

"The bulk of its contents consists of contributions from burglars," continued Mr. Kerr, "and other folk who prey upon society, in which they describe their successful exploits. Its tone is humorous and racy. The text is enlivened with comic sketches, some of which are uncommonly well done. Unless the police suppress it, it bids fair to have a prosperous career. It is not lacking in advertisements, most of them of a decidedly unique character. In one issue, for instance, a young man announces that 'being full of energy and temperament, and having a loving heart, he seeks a life partner in the shape of a young lady with small means.' The adventurer goes on to say that 'having practiced housebreaking from tender youth, he is now, at five and twenty, as expert a burglar as any in Moscow, and can therefore assure his wife comfort and even luxury.'

"The 'office' of the paper is situated in a shabby enough street," added Mr. Kerr, "opposite a small theatre. It is a private flat, and its small dimensions—a room overlooking the courtyard—seem too big for the table, chair and stove which furnish it. The chair is occupied by a shock-headed youth with long black hair, intelligent eyes, and an odor of greasy sheepskin and stale tobacco. He always says the editor is out, and contributors are invited to leave their offerings on the table, where lie an empty vodka bottle, a tea-stained piece of blotting paper, and a few cigarette ends. Nobody knows where it is printed, least of all the police, who have been on its track since the first number appeared. It comes out once a week and costs five kopecks, or about two and a half cents."

One on Father.

William had just returned from college, resplendent in peg top trousers, silk hosiery, a fancy waistcoat and a necktie that spoke for itself. He entered the library, where his father was reading. The old gentleman looked up and surveyed his son. The longer he looked the more disgusted he became.

"Son," he finally blurted out, "you look like a d— fool!"

Later the old major who lived next door came in and greeted the boy heartily. "William," he said, with undisguised admiration, "you look exactly like your father did twenty-five years ago when he came back from school!"

"Yes," replied William, with a smile, "so father was just telling me."

Talk Killed a Bear.

"I suppose," said the barber to the man who was wearing a bear's claw on his watch chain—"I suppose you killed that bear yourself?"

"Yes, I did," was the reply.

"Was it a grizzly bear?"

"It was."

"A big one?"

"About the size of a two-year-old steer."

"Gee whiz! How many bullets did it take to kill him?"

"Not any at all."

"Brain him with an axe?"

"No; I talked him to death."

It took the customer fifteen minutes to get the rest of his shave, and during that time the barber didn't speak another word.

All in the Training.

When Josephine was six years old she was taken for the first time to see a trained animal show, and went home much pleased with the performance. As she was at times slow to obey, her mother thought this a good time to teach her a lesson, so she said: "Don't you think, Josephine, that if dogs and ponies and monkeys can learn to obey so well, a little girl like you, who knows much more than animals, should obey even more quickly?" "Of course I would, mother," came the instant reply, "if I had been as well trained as they have been."

Value of Capital.

Once upon a time two utter bankrupts were considering ways and means of getting needed money.

"I know how we can make $9," said one.

"Raise a dollar note to ten by placing a cipher after the one."

"Where will we raise the dollar?"

Then the scheme failed for want of capital.

Manias of Authors.

Darwin always practiced on his old fiddle before writing; Chateaubriand while dictating to his secretary was in the habit of walking in his bare feet; Schiller and Goethe could not write unless their feet were on ice; Lord Derby always filled his mouth with brandy cherries; Fenimore Cooper used to chew gumdrops; Byron filled his pockets with truffles; Theophile Gautier burned incense.

Given Away.

A minister in Cornwall who was making a call upon a member of his flock who was a backslider asked:

"What's come over you that I don't see you at church at all now?"

"Heavens, man, you can't have seen me because I sit behind the pillar!"

"The pillar, John? Good gracious, the pillar! Why, it's two years since it was removed from the front of your seat!"

HUMOR OF THE GREEKS

Wit That Helped the Ancients Drive Dull Care Away.

SOME FIFTH CENTURY JOKES

The Absentminded Professor Was a Prolific Source of Merriment to the Jesters of Those Days—The Source of Many Modern Jokes.

The maxim that there is nothing new under the sun applies, it would seem, more truly to jokes and witticisms than to anything else. The chief differences between the jests of one generation and that of another lie mainly in their form. The kernel is practically the same. Nevertheless it is interesting to exhume some of these ancient jokes and to recognize in them the ancestors of the things at which we laugh today in the pages of our humorous publications.

Some humorous writers dearly love to make fun of the absentminded, unpractical university professor, who outside of his own subject lets his wits wander and is very slow to grasp anything in ordinary life. Such jokes as these were cracked centuries ago by the students and graduates of the great universities in ancient Greece, for it is a mistake to suppose that what we now call "college life" was unknown to the ancients.

As a matter of fact, the student at the University of Athens or at the University of Alexandria was very much the same sort of mortal as is the student today, and his professors were not so very different.

A witty Greek named Hierocles, a graduate of Alexandria, collected some time in the fifth century a volume of jests which were current among the students with regard to the woolgathering type of professor. A number of them are translated here as being of considerable interest in the history of humor and especially of college humor:

A professor, wishing to swim, was nearly drowned, whereupon he swore that he would never touch water again until he had learned how to swim.

Of twin brothers, one died. A professor thereupon, meeting the survivor, asked, "Is it you that died or your brother?"

A professor, learning that a raven would live for more than 200 years, bought one to test the matter.

A professor, wishing to cross a river, went on board the boat on horseback. When some one asked the reason he answered that he wanted to get over in a hurry.

A professor, looking out of the window of a house which he had bought, asked the passersby whether the house was becoming to him.

A professor, meeting another professor, said, "I heard you were dead." "And yet," replied the other, "you see that I am still alive." "Well," said the first in perplexity, "I don't know what to believe, for the man who told me about it is a much more truthful man than you!"

A professor, in danger of being shipwrecked, called for his tablets that he might make his will. Seeing thereupon his slaves lamenting their fate, he said, "Do not grieve, for I am going to set you free."

A professor dreamed that he had trodden on a nail and that the wound pained him. On waking he bound up his foot. Another professor, having learned the cause, remarked, "It served you right, for why do you sleep without sandals?"

A professor, meeting a doctor, hid himself behind a wall. Some one asking the cause, he answered, "I have not been sick for so long a time I am ashamed to come into the sight of a physician."

A professor, wishing to teach his horse to be a small eater, gave him no food at all. At length, the horse having starved to death, the professor exclaimed, "I have suffered a great loss, for just as he had learned not to eat he died!"

A professor, visiting a sick person, inquired about his health. The invalid, however, was not able to reply. Thereupon the professor, being angry and scolding the man, said, "I hope that I shall be sick some of these days, and then when you come to ask how I am I will not answer."

A professor sealed up a vessel of wine which he had bought. His servant having made a hole in the vessel beneath and drawn off some of the wine, the professor was astonished to see the contents diminished while the seals remained unbroken. A neighbor having told him to look whether it had not been taken out from below, he replied, "Why, you fool, it's the upper part of the wine and not the lower that is missing!"

A professor, a bald man and a barber traveling together agreed to keep watch in turn four hours, each while the others slept. The barber's turn came first. He quietly shaved the head of the sleeping professor and when the time elapsed awoke him. The latter, scratching his head as he got up and finding it bare, cried out: "What a rascal that barber is! He's waked the bald man instead of me!"—Exchange.

Legal Advice.

"Prisoner," said the justice, "you are charged with having struck the defendant."

"Yes, judge; I poked him, but he called me a liar."

"That's no excuse."

"Well, judge, it was my first experience. What do you do in such cases?"—Judge's Library.

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

C.G.E. CO. AND THE SURPLUS POWER AT NEW DAM

C. G. E. MAKE AN OFFER FOR THE SURPLUS POWER

Will Give $2,000 Per Year for 20 Years and Build and Equip Power House Which Will Revert to City at Expiration of Twenty Years—Conference Between City Council and Mr. Nicholls—No Agreement Yet.

The Canadian General Electric Company have made an offer to the city for the surplus power at the new waterworks dam. It is now being considered by the City Council acting in conjunction with the Water Commissioners, and it will likely be settled one way or another Monday night.

The proposition of the company was contained in a letter from Frederic Nicholls, vice-president and general manager of the Canadian General Electric Company, which was read at a special meeting of the City Council yesterday afternoon. The letter was as follows:—

To the Mayor,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I beg to submit herewith a brief memorandum of the result of my conference with yourself and members of the Water Commission. We propose to extend our works either at Peterborough or Toronto, but have met with a difficulty at Peterborough, that is have no additional power available.

Understanding that you have surplus power at the waterworks dam we beg to make you the following proposition: We will build and equip power house, operate and maintain same, and pay the sum of $2,000 per year for twenty years, on the understanding that not less than 1,000 horse power will be available. Should the city's requirements at any time render less than 1000 horse power available, a fair and equitable allowance to be made for such amount as may be deducted from the 1,000 horse power by the city of Peterborough, and in the event of disagreement as to what a fair and equitable allowance shall be the matter to be referred to arbitration.

At the expiration of the term of twenty years the power house and equipment shall be appraised and the city of Peterborough to pay to the company one-half of such appraised value.

Should an arrangement be entered into between the city of Peterborough and the company, the company agree to spend not less than $250,000 in improvements and extension.

The Canadian General Electric Co.
FREDERIC NICHOLLS.

After writing the above letter Mr. Nicholls told Mayor Morrow that he would recommend to the directors of his company that they should agree to hand over the power house and equipment to the city, at the end of twenty years without cost to the city.

Mr. Nicholls was present at the meeting of the council, along with Mr. E. G. Patterson, the local manager. Mayor Morrow and Mr. Nicholls had a long conference in the morning, and it was at the conclusion of it that Mr. Nicholls submitted the proposition contained in the letter published above. In addressing the council, Mr. Nicholls said the company had made a proposition and the city could accept or reject it. He would not urge the council to accept it unless they considered it in the interests of the city.

Those present at the meeting were: Mayor Morrow and Aldermen Graham, Metheral, Duncan, Buller, Hicks, Gillespie, Bradburn, Phelan, Duffus and Turner. Water Commissioners W. H. Hill and W. H. Moore, and Superintendent Bedford, of the waterworks department, were also present. Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the Water Commission, was out of the city, and as a result was unable to be present.

Mr. Nicholls was asked to address the Council, and he outlined the position of the C.G.E. company. The company were in a position where they had to increase their buildings and plant. The extensions would be made either at Peterborough or Toronto, and it was a hard matter to decide which place should be selected. The members of the board of directors held different views, some of them holding out strongly for Toronto. Toronto offered several advantages, among them a greater labor market, greater advertising facilities and an abundant supply of power. What the company needed the extra power at Peterborough for was largely for testing purposes. It was only needed at certain times, and when not needed for testing it would be non-productive. In Toronto the company could secure any amount of power for testing purposes at the meter rate and when they were not using it there was no cost. It would be seen that under these conditions the company would have to secure the additional power at Peterborough at a low rate. At the present time the company were spending about a million dollars a year in Peterborough, and if the additions to the plant were made here this would be increased by about half a million.

Mr. Nicholls considered the proposition of the company eminently fair, but unless the aldermen thought fit so he would not urge them to accept it.

Mr. W. H. Moore, Water Commissioner, was asked to express the views of the Water Commissioners, and replied that the commissioners had not held a meeting, and he could not present the views of that body. Anything he might say would only be his personal opinion. In view of the fact that the company wished to be compensated if there were less than a thousand horse power, Mr. Moore wanted to know if the company would pay the city anything extra if there were more than that amount.

"There will be no difference," said Mr. Nicholls.

Ald. Duncan asked if the $250,000 the company proposed spending was for buildings or plant.

"Both," said Mr. Nicholls. "We propose adding a storey to the office building, building a three-hundred-foot addition to the machine shop, building a new store house, and converting the present store house into a manufacturing building. The addition to the machine shop would make that building nine hundred feet long.

Ald. Duffus asked if the company would give any guarantee as to the number of hands they would employ.

"We cannot do that," said Mr. Nicholls, "for the number of hands is governed by the commercial barometer. We would not spend more money on the plant if we did not intend to keep it running. Roughly speaking, I would say we would employ 500 more hands than we are now doing."

Some of the aldermen asked Mr. Nicholls questions bearing on the proposition, after which he withdrew.

"I am looking after the interests of the C.G.E." said Mr. Nicholls, "and you are looking after the interests of the city. If you think our proposition is not a good one from the city's standpoint I would not urge you to accept it."

Ald. Buller did not agree with Mr. Nicholls' statement that the labor market was better in Toronto than in Peterborough.

Giving his personal opinion, Mr. W. H. Moore said that as a Water Commissioner, he considered any surplus power at the new dam should be used for the benefit of the Waterworks Department. The act gave the commissioners full control of the power developed at the dam, and they could do what they liked with it. The council had no power in this connection. He was of the opinion that any surplus at the dam should be used for the Waterworks Department. It would be devoted towards a reduction of the water rates or to put in a filtration system, which was needed. A filtration system would cost around $75,000, and the $2,000 per year offered by the C.G.E. would not meet more than half of the annual expenditure in this connection.

Ald. Bradburn said that if the power were given to the C.G.E. they would employ more men. There would be more water consumers, and this would enable the commissioners to reduce the rates.

"It's as broad as it's long," said Ald. Buller, in agreeing with Ald. Bradburn. "It might as well come out of one pocket as the other."

Ald. Metheral pointed out that if the city sold the power, it might be held up by the Light and Power Company when the company's contract for lighting the city expired at the end of four years. He would like to see the C.G.E. extend here, but the city should not put itself in a position where its hands would be tied in a few years.

"I think we will have power at our disposal in four years," said Ald. Turner. "I'd be willing to take a chance."

Ald. Duffus did not think there would be a lack of power at the end of four years. It meant a good deal to the city to get the C.G.E. extensions here.

Ald. Hicks favored the proposition although there were several modifications that might be made.

Mr. W. H. Hill, Water Commissioner, was of the opinion that the C. G. E. Company's offer was too low. He did not see how the Water Commissioners could let the power go at the price mentioned. He thought it could be disposed of to better advantage. He pointed out that any new buildings the company put up would be exempt from taxation except for school purposes. Another large company here were going to erect a large new building and were not asking the city for anything.

Ald. Phelan favored doing something for the C.G.E. if an agreement could be reached with Water Commissioners. He assured Mr. Nicholls before that gentleman left that the aldermen wished to deal fairly with the company which had done so much for the development of the city.

It was decided to leave the question over till Monday night when the regular meeting of the Council will be held. The Water Commissioners will be present on that occasion.

Review of the Negotiations

The negotiations between the city and the Canadian General Electric Company in connection with the surplus power to be developed at the new waterworks dam have been in progress for several weeks, but up to the present little has been made public, as it was felt that the negotiations could be proceeded with to better advantage up to a certain point without the information being the widely known. Two propositions have been made by the company, the last one being now before the council. The first one was rejected. The city has made two proposals, on suggestions, to the company, and they were both turned down. The first proposal of the company was made in a letter written by the company to the president of the Board of Trade. The letter is published on this page. The letter came before the council and the proposition was not favored. The council suggested that the city might agree to sell the company the power on the following basis:—

$12 per h.p. if the company spent $900,000 on buildings and plant.

$11 per h.p. if they spent $400,000.

$10 per h.p. if they spent $600,000.

If the above suggestion were carried out, the city was to develop the power, install the machinery and operate the plant.

This suggestion was not accepted by Mr. Nicholls, and then the suggestion came from the city that the company purchase the surplus power for a period of twenty years, to pay $2,500 the first ten years, and $5,000 the second ten, the company to build the power house, install the machinery and do the operating, the building and machinery to belong to the city at the end of twenty years. This suggestion was not satisfactory to the company, but out of it grew the proposition made by the company, which was before the council yesterday.

It must be remembered that the waterworks department has first right to the powers developed at the new dam and that the council cannot take any action without the consent of the Commissioners.

The Water Commissioners have prepared that a by-law to raise $70,000 to develop the surplus power at the new dam be submitted to the property owners in the near future. This was proposed in view of the fact that there is going to be surplus power at the dam, and that it should not be allowed to go to waste.

Mr. Nicholls conveyed the impression before the council yesterday that even if the additions to the buildings and plant were made in Toronto it was the intention of the company to operate the plant at Peterborough to its full capacity.

MINERS ARE OUT

Huge Coal Strike Begins in United States Fields for More Pay.

St. Louis, Mo., April 1.—Three hundred thousand organized miners of the bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Western Kentucky, and Arkansas quit work last night.

The miners, members of the United Mine Workers of America, declared the walk-out was not a strike, but merely a suspension of work pending an arrangement between themselves and the operators for the wage scale for another year, the old scale having expired with the month of March.

The men demand an increase of pay, in some instances of five cents a ton, and in other instances more, and certain changes in working conditions.

Confidence is expressed by the operators that there will be no general coal famine, large supplies of fuel having been secured in anticipation of the walk-out.

While the miners predicted the suspension would be a short by a prompt signing of wage scales, some of the operators maintained that the mines might be kept closed for a month or sixty days, or even longer.

The conditions in the various states were as follows:

Illinois, 900 mines closed and 75,000 miners quit; Indiana, 18,000 miners out; Pennsylvania, approximately 40,000 men out; Iowa every mine in Iowa closed pending settlement of the wage scale.

Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and Arkansas comprising the southwestern interstate fields, 21,000 miners quit; Ohio, all miners quit; at Lorraine, Ohio, one steel plant shut down and threw out 4,000 men, the managers announcing a shortage of coal.

The first victory for the men came in an announcement from Brazil, Ind., the centre of the Indiana block coal district, where it was announced that rock was growing where it had the men's demand for a five-cent increase would be granted.

President Thomas L. Lewis, of the miners' union, declared a total of 300,000 miners had quit work.

FIRST PROPOSITION MADE BY THE C.G.E. CO. TO THE CITY

Outlined in Letter Sent to President of the Board of Trade Several Weeks Ago Was Not Considered Satisfactory by the City—Terms Upon Which Company Offered to Develop the Surplus Power.

The Canadian General Electric Co. on March 10 sent the following letter to Ald. G. A. Gillespie, president of the Board of Trade, in connection with negotiations being carried on between the Company and the city regarding the development of power at the new waterworks dam:—

G. A. Gillespie,
President Board of Trade,
Peterborough.

Dear Sir,—With regard to the negotiations between the city authorities and our company it seems to me that the matter has not been given as thorough consideration as the importance of the subject demands. I would submit the following for your serious consideration, and for you to judge as to whether you consider it advisable to bring the matter up before the Board of Trade, and again, possibly, before your confreres in the Council.

The proposition that Mr. Nicholls, 2nd Vice-President and General Manager, made to the Mayor and yourself, was that the City should equip and instal at the Waterworks Dam, the necessary apparatus and machinery to utilize the surplus power, and sell it to us at $10 per h.p. in the event of our spending $100,000 on buildings and equipment, and for every additional $100,000 that we spend in a like manner, the price for the power to automatically drop $1 per h.p., and when we had spent $600,000 the price per h.p. would automatically have fallen to $5.00 to remain at that price no matter how much more we should spend in increasing our factory.

If an agreement were to be reached between the city and the Canadian General Electric Company on this basis, the attached table will show you how much revenue the City would get from this Company. I would particularly draw your attention to the fact that in twenty years we would have paid the city $120,000 for the use of the power, and the total cost to the City would be $95,000.

The Water Commissioners have been advised by their Consulting Engineer that the cost to develop the surplus power at the Waterworks Dam would be from $60,000 to $65,000, and assuming that it would cost $65,000 there would be about $15,000 worth of electrical apparatus. We offered to install this equipment and take our pay in power which would mean that the city would only have to issue debentures for $50,000. Capitalizing the $15,000 on a basis of selling debentures at par, bearing 4 1-4 per cent. interest, and providing a sinking fund for redemption in twenty years at 3 1-2 per cent., means that our offer would save the city $1,575 per year in interest and sinking fund, which in twenty years amounts to $35,000 or $1.25 per h.p.

The remainder of the amount necessary to develop the surplus power, $50,000, capitalized on the same basis, would mean $4,250 a year that the City would have to raise, or for twenty years, $85,000, or a total yearly cost per h.p. of $4.75.

The proposition that the City authorities have submitted to the Company is that if we spend $300,000, they will give us the surplus power at $12.00 per h.p.; if we spend $400,000 at $11.00 per h.p.; if we spend $600,000 at $10.00 per h.p., and then remain at that figure. This would mean, if we were to take the power from the City on that basis, when paying the city $12.00 per h.p., it would actually cost us $17.75 per h.p., which I will later show.

I am sure if Peterborough is to grow and increase in population and importance it must necessarily grow through its manufacturing industries or the acquirement of manufacturing industries, and if the city is not prepared to give its advantages to either its present manufacturers who wish to grow, or to those who wish to locate here, at cost to the city, then the city has nothing to offer to induce any manufacturers to locate here or to induce its present manufacturing industries to grow and expand. I am informed that in Welland the manufacturers who have located there purchase their power at $13 per h.p., and have been told that the price in Orillia is $12.50 per h.p., delivered, without any further cost, and you will readily see that there is not much chance for this city to get manufacturers on a basis of supplying them with power if the power is not supplied at cost, because the advantages of locating in the cities are so considerable that unless the power is sold at cost there would be no advantage in locating here.

In the terms in which the city authorities have stated they are prepared to sell us this power, it is also stipulated that we would have to operate the power house, which means labor, maintenance and repairs, and also provide the means of distributing the power to ourselves. The cost of labor for operating the power house, maintenance and repairs, etc., will be, probably, from $2 to $3 per h.p. Regarding the cost of distribution, Mr. Larmonth informs me that it costs the Peterborough Light and Power Co. between $6 and $7 per h.p. to distribute their power over the city. The report of the Ontario Hydro Commission is that the cost of distribution is from $3 to $7 per h.p., with an average of $5 per h.p. for distributing power, and I feel quite satisfied when I tell you that it will be $2 per h.p. to distribute it from the waterworks dam to ourselves, that I am not extravagant in this figure.

Summing up the proposition from the city, you will see that the price per h.p. is $12, to which must be added the cost of operation and maintenance, $2 to $3, then $2 for distribution, and $1.25 that we are prepared to bear in interest and sinking fund, and we find that the cost figures up to $17.75 per h.p., whereas it will actually cost the city $4.75 per h.p.

From the attached table you will see that in the first 10 years we will pay the city $70,000, and in the next 10 years $50,000, and save them $25,500, in interest and sinking fund, or $145,000, which, deducting $15,000 value of the electrical apparatus, which would be paid for in power, means that we would pay the city $130,500, whereas the total cost to the city is $95,000.

I am sure that the City Council and the citizens want to see the city grow, both by an increase manufacturing concerns expanding and by securing others, and I think that if the members of the City Council will go over their figures again carefully they will see that it is much in the interests of the city generally that everything be done to accomplish the above results, particularly when it does not cost the city one dollar. This company cannot expand without more power being available and secured.

Yours truly,
Canadian General Electric Co.,

THE LUMSDEN INQUIRY IS CALLED AN ABSOLUTE FARCE

Counsel Appointed by the Government Were all Liberals and F. H. Chrysler, the "People's" Representative, an Employee of the Government Since 1897.

Ottawa, April 1.—A long discussion took place in the Commons yesterday over the Lumsden investigation and the reasons why the Conservative members of the committee retired from it.

The matter was introduced by Haughton Lennox, of South Simcoe. He quoted from sessional papers to show that thirteen contracts on the National Transcontinental Railway, at $37,169,101, had cost $60,798,982, and that the total cost of the road completed, for schedule items only, would be $124,123,041. Adding seven years interest, at 3 per cent., compounded, the total cost of the scheduled items would be $153,655,169. The Minister of Finance had stated in 1903, that the cost of the railway would be $51,200,000. Already the cost was three times the total pledged expenditure, yet not three-quarters of the total work was included, and there remained the cost of the right of way, the rails, the fastenings, the terminals, the station houses, the turn-tables, the sidings, the telegraph system, the workshops, the elevators and the bridges, including the Quebec bridge, all counting for more than $50,000,000.

He further observed that in thirteen contracts, which were to cost $40,239,265, the rock alone in these contracts would cost $42,029,680, which showed that rock was growing where it had not existed before the contracts were let.

Mr. Lennox described the Lumsden investigation as "an absolute and damnable farce," which was why he and the two other Conservatives left the committee. The three counsel appointed by the Government were all Liberals. F. H. Chrysler, who was supposed to represent the people, was a "good honest man as lawyers go," who had done good service for the Government, and since 1897 the Government had paid him $26,917. Apart from that, he was known as a representative of corporations against the people. Altogether, however, this was the most ridiculous, nonsensical and dishonest enquiry ever held in Canada.

Mr. Clarke (North Essex), one of the Liberal members of the committee of enquiry, expressed amazement that one of the members of the committee should come to the House and endeavor to prejudge a matter on which a decision had not been reached. Both the committee and the House had previous to the action of the minority, negatived the proposal that the right to name counsel should rest with the minority, which had not even taken the trouble to suggest the name of any capable lawyer. Had they suggested the name of a proper counsel, the majority would doubtless have agreed to the appointment. He described the minority members as "quitters."

Sam Barker of Hamilton, a minority member, said he had withdrawn because he was convinced that it was to be a whitewashing affair. He believed that the subordinates who had declined to follow the instructions of the chief engineer had been advised in the course they had taken by those higher up than Mr. Lumsden.

Victor Geoffrion, the chairman, condemned the Conservative members for leaving the committee.

T. W. Crothers (West Elgin) read a letter which the commissioners had written to Mr. Lumsden, in which they protested against the proceedings of the arbitrators, declaring that the examination of the work of the engineers was hasty, insufficient and superficial, that the engineers were not afforded a sufficient hearing, and that the contractors were not afforded an opportunity of showing cause.

"This grossly improper letter," said Mr. Crothers, "written obviously in sympathy with the subordinate engineers and contractors, had not been disapproved by the Government." That circumstance, and the prompt acceptance of Mr. Lumsden's resignation, showed that the Government had determined to stand by the commissioners. Similar methods as to the appointment of counsel had found great favor with the late Liberal Government of Ontario shortly before its ignominious dissolution.

Mr. Crothers said in the light of experience, he had refused to allow himself to be humbugged or to be a party to any such farcial proceedings.

E. M. Macdonald (Pictou) in dealing with a statement made by Mr. Barker to the effect that Mr. Tarte had been allowed counsel at the time of the McGreevy enquiry in 1891, said that Mr. Tarte had made the charges on that occasion himself, and had brought his counsel to the committee. He was subsequently paid by the Government.

Arthur Meighen (Portage La Prairie) and E. A. Lancaster (Lincoln) concluded the debate.

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY'S OFFERS

The Review publishes to-day the two proposals that have been made by the Canadian General Electric Company for the use of the surplus power at the waterworks dam. One of these proposals was made some time ago in a letter from the general superintendent of the company to the president of the Peterborough Board of Trade. The other was made to the City Council yesterday by Mr. Frederic Nicholls, of Toronto, the second vice-president and general manager of the company, as the result of negotiations which have been in progress for several weeks between the city's representatives and the company.

While the first proposal has been withdrawn in favor of the later one, it is probable that the company would be willing to make an agreement along the line of either proposal.

The first question for the Waterworks Commissioners and the City Council to consider is which of these proposals would be the more advantageous for the city and the second question is whether the offer which may be considered the better of the two is sufficiently favorable to the city to be acceptable.

If the first offer were approved the Water Commissioners would have to borrow from $65,000 to $70,000 for the construction of the works, and a by-law authorizing them to do so would have to be voted upon. If the Water Commissioners and the City Council agreed that the second offer should be approved, the matter could be settled at once, without a vote of taxpayers, as the company undertake the whole cost of development, pay the city two thousand dollars per year for twenty years for the power privilege, and at the end of that period hand over the power house and equipment to the city free of cost.

It is of the utmost importance to Peterborough that the new buildings and plant of the Canadian General Electric Company should be located in this city rather than in Toronto, but the Water Commissioners and the City Council will, of course, be expected to make the best possible bargain.

HUMOR WITH A PURPOSE

A booklet giving a history of the world's greatest comic paper, Punch, has just been published. The book is liberally illustrated with reproductions of some of the most noted cartoons that have appeared in Punch during the last seventy years, for Punch has reached the venerable age of three-score years and ten.

Canadians and Americans who take up an occasional copy of Punch are apt to find its humor hard to understand. This is largely due to the fact that they have not an understanding of British politics and British social life. To anyone who has an intimate acquaintance with British affairs Punch is delightful. It has always been read with interest and appreciation by the foremost men in Britain and its influence on British politics has been great. The cheapening of postage on British newspapers sent to Canada and the improved cable news service of Canadian newspapers will make our people better acquainted with British affairs, and we may suggest that it would do Canadians no harm to take Punch regularly with the cable news from England. They would soon get accustomed to it and learn to appreciate its witticisms.

Punch is a humorous paper with a purpose. One of the earliest contributors to its columns was Thackeray, the great novelist, who said: "The humorous writer professes to awaken and direct your life, your pity, your kindness, your scorn of untruth, pretension, imposture, your tenderness for the weak, the poor, the oppressed, the unhappy. To the best of his means and ability, he comments on all the ordinary actions and passions of life almost." These words, may the publishers, fairly describe the aims of Punch.

Personifying the spirit that has animated the paper the historian says: "Punch has not only been kindly, he has proved himself also a doughty champion. No one has been too exalted or too powerful to escape the weight of his baton. He has attacked abuses from the highest to the lowest. Sham gentility, vulgar ostentation, crazes and fads, foolish custom — all have been set up as targets for his shafts of ridicule or scorn. He has been a moral reformer, a disinterested critic, a liberal-minded patriot."

If every newspaper, whether serious or comic, could honestly make the same claim the world would be better than it is.

But Punch is not so solid and serious as might be supposed from these quotations. It is full of light touches and many of its witticisms have been quoted and requoted throughout the English-speaking world for generations. For instance, take the brief dialogue between an enquiring child and his impatient parent:—

"What is mind?" "No matter."
"What is matter?" "Never mind."

KEEP THE KIDNEYS WELL

Health Saving Explained by a Peterboro Citizen Who Knows From Experience

Many Peterborough people take their lives in their hands, by neglecting the kidneys when they know these organs need help.

The reason so many use Doan's Kidney Pills is their quick relief for all Kidney weakness. Here is what a Peterborough citizen says:—

Mrs. Geo. Hawes, of 857 Water street, Peterborough, Ont., says:—"I had suffered for some time with many painful and annoying symptoms of kidney trouble, and, although I had tried many remedies and doctors, I found little or no relief. My back was weak, and a dull, dragging-down pain settled across the small of it, and extended into my shoulders and around my sides. I was weak and languid and the least exertion would tire me out. Dizzy spells were frequent, and often I would awake with a severe headache. I tried Doan's Kidney Pills through an advertisement at Madill's Pharmacy. I soon found them to benefit me and continued their use. In a comparatively short time I was as well and strong as ever and without a symptom of the painful and long standing disease."

The Louisiana State Game Commission will ask the Legislature for an appropriation for the importation of big African game to Louisiana for breeding purposes.

At Philadelphia yesterday, three strike-breakers from New York were committed to jail by Coroner Hord, to await the action of the grand jury, on the charge of homicide. They are accused of being responsible for the death of Leo Timmerman, an aged man, who was thrown from a car while it was running at high speed.

Government Will Appeal to People.

Halifax, April 1.—The Local Legislature will likely prorogue next week. The prohibition bill will be introduced on Monday. It will likely call for provincial prohibition outside of Halifax city, but some members will insist on its provisions applying to the whole province.

In this case there is likely to be a lively debate, as there are 88 saloons in this city, and the liquor men have a strong influence with the Government.

It is expected that immediately after the close of the session the Government will go to the country, the prohibition measure being made the main issue.

Premier Murray brought down the financial returns yesterday for the year ending Sept. 30, 1909. He announced a surplus of $15,422.21. The revenue did not suffer from the strike in the coal district as badly as might be supposed. The effect of the strike, however, will be felt more keenly the present year, as a result of the loss in coal royalties which furnish about half the revenues of the province.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"All the more reason, then, why you should have told me."

"We did talk it over—mamma, George, Laura and I—and we came to the conclusion that it was just what you would like. You're always so good, papa, to people who've been your opponents, and"—

"I thought you said you were afraid I wouldn't approve of it."

"I had that feeling too. You see, I was so anxious to do something for them. You've no idea how poor they are, and the mother is blind, and"—

"She must have changed for the better."

"Oh, she's living yet, is she?"

"Yes, papa, and such a saint!"

"Then she must have changed for the better. Well, we'll let it be. If there's any harm done"—

"Oh, but there isn't, papa!"

"So much the better, then. I'm sorry, dear, that you've been brought into contact with these people"—

"But they're not a bit like what you think them."

"I'm sorry, all the same, and now that the business is over, as I suppose it is, you can let the acquaintance drop."

"It isn't quite over—the business, I mean."

"Well, when it is, then," he said shortly. "Now tell me how your mother is," he went on, in another tone, as they turned into the Champs Elysees. "Does she suffer less?"

"She's very brave about it. Sometimes I can't tell whether she suffers much or not."

"And sometimes you can. Is that it?"

"Of course when she has a paroxysm she can't hide it. But I don't think they come quite so often now."

"What with one thing and another," he said moodily, "I'm afraid I've stayed away too long. But I couldn't help it. Such great interests were at stake."

"I'm sorry if I've added to your cares," she murmured, laying her hand on his arm. "You know that, don't you, papa, dear?"

"Yes, dear, I know it," he answered briefly and sank into silence until they reached home.

It was only in the evening that he spoke again of the subject Paula had so much at heart.

"Come up to my room," he said as they rose from the table after dinner. They had dined alone. Mrs. Trafford had not left her room, and George and Laura were out. During the meal he had been unusually silent, Paula would have almost said dejected. His anxiety about her mother, she thought, would have been enough to account for that. She was not expecting his first words as he closed the door of the large, book-lined room, half library, half office, into which they entered.

"Did I understand you to say," he asked, "that Lady Alice Holroyd suggested your being painted by this man Winship?"

"Oh, no! I said only that she knew the Winships. In fact, she and the duke have looked after them more or less for years past. They've often been over to stay with them at Edenbridge."

"Then whose idea was it—I mean the portrait?"

He lighted a cigar, and Paula seated herself on a sofa.

"It was Laura who spoke of it first, but it was I who wanted to help them if there's any blame to be attached anywhere, it's mine. Laura only suggested it, because she knew I wanted to do something for them."

"Why?"

"Because I'd heard they were so poor. The duke told me that. George told me that all the property the Winships used to have had come to us. I was sorry for them. I was more than sorry. I felt as if I were responsible"—

"Responsible?" he exclaimed, stopping before her with a sharp jerk of his person. "Responsible for what?"

"Perhaps I used the wrong word," she returned softly. "What I felt was that if any one should help them it should be one of us."

"And was there any other reason? That's what I want to know. Speak out, dear."

"I had no other, papa."

"Are you sure of that?"

"Quite sure. What other should I have?"

He took two or three turns up and down the room and again paused before her.

"Did it occur to you that I might have been hard to the Winships?"

"Yes, papa."

"Did the thought come to you that I might even have been unjust to them?"

"I knew you couldn't have been. I knew it wasn't possible."

"How did you know?"

"I knew by myself, first of all. I knew you wouldn't be. Then I talked it over with Laura, and she told me that no one could go behind the law and that if the law is on your side you must be right. And then, besides," she added, looking up at him with a smile, "I was quite sure of it. No one would make me believe otherwise, no matter what they said, no matter what I saw."

Trafford's brow cleared suddenly. He stooped to her side on the sofa and drew her to him.

"You were quite right to have done it, darling," he murmured. "I'm glad you thought of it. It's just like your goodness. I know I can always trust to that. I do like to help those whom in the way of business I've had to hit hard. But you'll never think that I hit hard without reason, will you? You see, that's what I was afraid of, and it would be a dark day for me if my little girl went over, even in thought, to my enemies. You never will, will you, dear?"

In the very act of giving the assurance he asked a sudden determination came to her. It was the woman in her unconsciously taking advantage of the man's moment of softness.

"Papa," she asked, leaning back in his arms, "have I as much as a million dollars of my very own?"

"You've more. I invested a million dollars in your name five years ago. And since then you've had $300,000 from your Uncle Andrew and another $200,000 from your Aunt Jane. Why do you ask?"

"Couldn't I give a million of that to the Winships?"

He drew his arms slowly away from her.

"Couldn't you"— he began, as if trying to understand her question. "Say that again, dear, will you?"

She repeated her words with some hesitation. For a minute he made no response.

"I thought you believed in me," he said at last reproachfully.

"So I do, papa. And yet—and yet"—

"And yet—what?"

"And yet something seems wrong to me somewhere. Oh, papa, don't be angry with me! I can't bear it if you are. I'm so unhappy about it. I don't want all that money. I don't want any of it. I'd much rather they had it. Even if I'm wrong I'd rather purchase a little peace of mind in that way. It wouldn't be very much for me to give."

"But don't you see," he pointed out, with cold gentleness, "that if you did that it would be saying to all the world that, in your opinion at least, I had robbed them?"

"Oh!" she gasped. "I see! I see!"—Then, of course, I couldn't do it in that way."

"Neither in that way nor in any other way," he commented, still coldly, as he rose.

"You're wrong, papa," she said to herself, while an expression of mingled radiance and fear came over her. "There still remains—the way you haven't thought of."

And she sat still, dreaming.

CHAPTER XL

"YOU'LL leave me alone with her," Mrs. Winship said to Marah, who was propping her with pillows in an armchair. "It will be for the last time."

"You mean that she won't come again when that thing has gone to the Salon. I hope not."

"I mean, dear, that I shall not be here. You mustn't expect me to stay long now nor grieve that I am leaving you. Of course she will come again if she marries Roger."

"Oh, mother, don't say that! I know you've been thinking of it, but it would kill me. I'd rather see Roger ruined, as father was, than married to a Trafford. She comes here with her money, thinking to buy us"—

"She means well, dear. Some day you'll see that and judge her more justly. Kiss me, dear child," she added as a ring came to the door. "Now leave us together till Roger comes."

It was the last visit before the removal of the portrait to the Salon. Finished and framed, it stood now at the end of the long studio, making a spot of incongruous splendor amid the poverty of its surroundings.

"I've written a check for 20,000 francs," Paula whispered hurriedly when the first greetings were over. "Dear Mrs. Winship, do take it. I daren't give it to your son himself. When you said eight thousand you didn't know it would turn out such a work as this."

"Yes, I did, dear. I knew Roger couldn't do anything but what would be very great. I mustn't take the money, dear. I know what is in your heart, but it would give Roger great pain to be offered more than the sum agreed upon."

"But it isn't worthy of what he's done"—

"You see, dear," she interrupted, "he doesn't value his work by money."

"But he ought to."

"You think so because you're young. I would have said so, too, once. But, oh, my dear, I've lived long enough to see how little money can do toward buying us the things most worth having. Roger is wiser than I was at his age. He's beginning where I leave off, and I bless God for it. He's found already the secret I had to learn through so much struggle and sorrow."

She lay back on her pillow with closed eyes, as if so many words had exhausted her. Paula was wondering whether she ought not to ring for some one when the blind woman raised herself and spoke again.

"I take your own case as an example, dear. You're rich, and you want to help us. You'd like to give us money. You don't see that you've given us more than money in giving us yourself."

"But there's money, too," Paula urged.

"Forgive me if I speak too plainly," Mrs. Winship quavered on. "I haven't long to stay here now—a few days, a few hours, perhaps not that. I feel the heavenly gates opening to let me in, and before I go I'd like to tell you that I've read your heart aright. You've seen that we had to suffer for the conflicts of the past, and you've wanted to give us back something of what we've lost. Isn't that it?"

"I hoped"— Paula began.

"And you've succeeded, dear. The Lord is letting me depart in a peace I should never have known if you hadn't come. You've done more for me and mine"—

"I've done nothing at all for Roger," Paula interrupted quickly, calling him for the first time by his Christian name.

"It will be shown you," the mother sighed gently. "Where there are young hearts, like yours and his, they'll not go far astray."

She sank back on the pillows again and lay still, with closed eyes. As Paula watched a bright pallor, like an illumination, stole over the waxen face. Presently there came a light breathing, though the blind eyes remained closed. Paula sat still, wondering if this might not be the distant approach of death, till, with a wide swing of the door and long, vigorous tread, Winship came in. She motioned him to step lightly and pointed to his mother.

"Marah, come here!" he called in a loud whisper through the still open doorway.

"You've tired her, Miss Trafford," Marah said bluntly when she appeared.

"I'm very sorry."

Mrs. Winship stirred.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, O.

SALARY OF THE MEDICAL HEALTH OFFICER TO BE $600

Dr. MacPherson Asked for $800, but Property Committee Decided on $200 Increase to Take Effect April 1st—Ald. Bradburn Makes a Protest.

The Property Committee, at its meeting last night decided to increase the salary of the medical health officer, of $400 to $600 per year, the increase to take effect April 1st, today.

Dr. MacPherson was present at the meeting and had with the committee discussed several matters in connection with his duties as outlined in the new by-law, and when these had been satisfactorily settled he asked for a salary of $800. Dr. MacPherson then withdrew while the committee discussed the salary question. While the feeling was that the doctor's request of $800 was reasonable, from what source the money would be forthcoming was a puzzling question. Finally, on motion of Ald. Graham and Ald. Batten, it was decided to offer Dr. MacPherson a $200 increase. This amount was accepted by the doctor, on the understanding that in the appropriations for next year he would receive consideration.

During the discussion between Dr. MacPherson and committee, on one of the duties of the M.H.O., under the new by-law—that of milk inspection—Ald. Bradburn registered a protest against the habit of some milk vendors who, during the course of a day's distribution to their customers, frequently buy from one another. This exchange, said Ald. Bradburn, takes place on the street and dust and dirt accumulates in the milk during the transaction. This should not be allowed.

Dr. MacPherson thought milk tickets should not be used a second time, and also that in the cases of diphtheria and scarlet fever the name of the milk vendor should be reported.

Another matter dealt with by the committee was that the chairman be authorized to make the same arrangements as last year for the disposal of the refuse of the city, and, failing to do this, to secure a lot for the purpose.

It was also decided to secure a wider door for the vault to be installed in the new public library. Mr. Sherwood, representing the company from whom the purchase will be made, was present, and advised this being done. It will be 28 inches wide instead of 22 inches, and there will be little, if any, more expense incurred. The cost is $65.

Those members of the committee at the meeting were, the chairman, Ald. Duncan; Ald. Batten, Ald. Bradburn, Ald. Graham and Mayor Morrow.

FINED FOR SUPPLYING LIQUOR TO BLACKLISTER

Thomas Cleary and Chas. Lynch were drunk yesterday. With the former it was only a case of an ordinary jag, but Lynch was prominent in a disturbance at the C. P. R. station. Both pleaded guilty, on appearing before Magistrate Dumble, but it was April Fool for them. They were discharged.

BOTH FINED.

A second term blacklister had pleaded guilty to a charge of having been found under the influence of liquor and did not appear in court. A fine of $10 with $2.60 costs, was imposed. Inspector Stewart was present and he also had the name of the man who supplied the liquor. The charge was admitted in writing, and in this case the fine was $25 with $2.60 costs. Both amounts were ordered to be paid in ten days.

SKIPPED OUT.

Another consumer, whose name was added to the already large list of prohibited ones, last week, was called by name, but there was no answer. It is understood that he has left for parts unknown. He was served with a subpoena by P. C. Meagher, at his home and while in bed, on Wednesday. A fine of $10 with costs, was registered against him.

Suffragette Question

On the evening of Friday, April 1st, the Ladies' Literary of St. Peter's T. A.S. will hold their usual fortnightly literary meeting, at which an interesting debate on the suffragette question will be held. There will also be a musical programme.

A SUPERIOR PERFORMANCE

Prof. E. Frank Vernon and his wife presented at the Brock street rink last night an unusually attractive roller skating act in which they appeared to great advantage. They were greeted by a large audience, which was most encouraging to the performers, applauding their efforts in very enthusiastic fashion.

The automobile novelty in which Prof. Vernon glides around on a pair of miniature autos, illuminated like real touring cars at night is one of the most original features of the performance and was cordially received. Miss Vernon's evolutions are graceful and captivating. Altogether the work of the skaters in concert and individually is decidedly novel and interesting.

JURY WAS EMPANELLED

To Make Investigation Into the Cause of the Death of Ernest Gilbert--Inquest on Tuesday Morning

Yesterday afternoon at five o'clock in Belleghem's undertaking rooms, Coroner Gray empanelled a jury to enquire into the cause of the death of Ernest Gilbert, the young man who died at the Nicholls hospital yesterday morning. The following were sworn in to act on the jury:—Messrs. Thomas Hooper, R. Devine, Wm. Taylor, R. J. Munro, Jos. Picard, Arch. Campbell, F. Clarke, L. Hall, Wm. Grey, Thos. Meredith, W. Armstrong, Jas. Fitzsimmons, Harry Hanwell, Mr. Jas. Snyder was appointed foreman. Coroner Grey pointed out to the jury that an unlawful act had been committed—that of shooting on Sunday and it was on this account that an investigation was necessary.

The wound on the right side of the body of the dead man was viewed by the jury who recommended that Dr. MacPherson, be an assistant to the surgeon who performs the postmortem examination. The jury then adjourned to meet again at the City Council Chamber, on Tuesday morning, April 5th, at ten o'clock.

BROKERAGE OFFICE RAID CAUSES BIG SENSATION

Toronto, April 1.—Toronto financial circles had a sensation to-day when the police raided the brokerage office of Patriarche & Co., as a "buckety shop." Eleven arrests were made, among them F. Strachan Cox, a prominent broker, and relative of Senator Cox. When the Duke of York visited Toronto he was alderman and chairman of the Reception Committee.

CHARGED WITH SELLING LIQUOR

Judgment Reserved in Case in Lakefield Yesterday

Messrs E. A. and Charles Tanner, of Lakefield, appeared before County Police Magistrate Edmison yesterday on the charge of selling liquor to Mrs. Fletcher, of Toronto.

As E. A. Tanner was not in the store at the time of the alleged sale the charge against him was dropped and judgment was reserved by County Police Magistrate Edmison on the charge against Charles Tanner and the firm.

Mrs. Fletcher swore to getting the liquor at Tanner's store, and her evidence was contradicted flatly by the defence.

Messrs G. N. Gordon and F. D. Kerr appeared for the defendants and Mr. J. H. Barnham acted for the prosecution.

Mrs. Fletcher, it will be remembered, was arrested in Lakefield some time ago for being drunk and disorderly, and was allowed to go on condition she left the village.

Inspector Williams, of East Peterborough, however, laid the charge against Mr. Tanner and Mrs. Fletcher was present from Toronto to testify.

UNIFORMITY

WHAT do we mean by uniformity in flour? We mean stability and dependability, every barrel like every other barrel, every baking like every other.

Now, uniformity in flour comes only from eternal vigilance. It is the result of everlasting care and watchfulness at the mill. It can only be produced by the most advanced methods of milling and the most expensive up-to-date equipment.

One of the many great virtues of ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR is its absolute uniformity. It never varies. It is the same yesterday, today, to-morrow. Week in and week out, year in and year out it is always uniform, always the best, always invariable in results whether for bread or pastry.

Royal Household Flour has to be uniform. It cannot be anything else. There is no happen-chance connected with it. It is surrounded at every stage of production with the utmost care and watchfulness. The Ogilvie Mills are models of up-to-date equipment. The machinery is the most advanced and most expensive. The inspection laboratory and test baking departments are the most complete and scientific in the world.

It has taken enormous Capital and the experience of a life time to achieve the absolute uniformity of Royal Household Flour. And it is this achievement which is your protection against risk of any kind in buying it. The watch, watch, watch and test, test, test which have made ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR the world's finest flour are your permanent safeguard as to quality.

Royal Household Flour is best for bread, best for cakes, best for pies, best for all household baking.

To be sure of uniform results in baking whether for bread or pastry—

—use Royal Household Flour and stick to it.

ASQUITH TRYING TO BRING ABOUT THE IMPENDING BATTLE

British Premier Gives Notices of Closure to Veto Resolutions and Intimated That Other Important Affairs Will Come up Soon.

London, April 1.—The official opposition amendment to Premier Asquith's resolution on the veto power of the House of Lords was removed in the House of Commons yesterday by Sir Robert Bannatyn Finlay.

It declares in favor of a strong and efficient second chamber and expresses willingness to consider proposals for the reform of the Upper House, but it declines to proceed with the Government's proposals which destroy the usefulness of any second chamber.

Winston Churchill, the Home Secretary, declared that when the veto resolutions were disposed of, the Government would advance with the budget, regardless of the consequences. Unless the House of Commons carried the budget, it was idle, he said, to look to the King or to the country to carry the veto bill; but he predicted that at the proper time and under the proper circumstances they would succeed in carrying both the veto and the budget measures to the steps of the throne.

Mr. Churchill closed with a significant statement.

"The time for action," he said, "has arrived. Since the Lords have used their veto to affront the prerogative of the crown, and have invaded the rights of the Commons, it has become necessary that the crown and the Commons, acting together, should restore the balance of the constitution and restrict for ever the veto power of the House of Lords."

Premier Asquith's guillotining motion, which is published to-day, provides that the committee stage of all three veto resolutions shall be concluded on the night of April 14.

The notice of closure to the veto resolutions in committee is coupled with intimation that similar action will be taken subsequently in regard to the budget, and has created the general impression that the Government has decided to accelerate the crisis, and so, if a general election is necessitated, which is almost the universal view, the dissolution will be in May.

Conferences between the Cabinet and the Nationalists have occurred in the last few days, but up to the present seem to have failed. Redmond insists on retaining his hold, at least until the final stages of the budget, and until the Lords have dealt with the veto resolutions, despite the promises of a remission of the whisky tax in the 1910-11 budget. Of course, desperate as the situation to the Government appears, there is still time for an arrangement. Dillon had a long talk with Lloyd-George yesterday.

Meanwhile, corroborative evidence of a belief in an election in May is found in the active preparations of all parties, and it is noticed, too, both in the tone and temper of the Churchill speech last night. This appeared to bear testimony to the failure of the Government to bring the Nationalists into line. Perhaps, however, the Nationalists may be conciliated by the Home Secretary's hint that the Cabinet may ask the King to create enough peers to pass the veto resolutions.

Complain of $25 Restriction.

London, April 1.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Surprise is being expressed in shipping circles that copies of the Canadian Government regulations in force March 15 were only received in London yesterday.

The silent application of the £5 rule for emigrants is the subject of complaint, and steamship companies have asked the Canadian Government to suspend it until all the emigrants booked have reached the Dominion.

Blue Suits Replace Stripes.

Pittsburg, April 1.—There are so many "gentlemen convicts" among the 700 prisoners of the Western Penitentiary, that Warden John Francis announced yesterday that the stripes are to be practically abandoned at that institution. The conspicuous prison garb only serves to embitter the men, said the warden, and makes it more difficult to reform. Neat suits of blue with brass letters on them are to be substituted.

Jardine Supports Government.

Victoria, B.C., April 1.—John Jardine, M.P.P., for Esquimault, one of the two remaining Liberals in the Provincial Legislature, has, in a published statement, expressed himself as strongly approving the Conservative Government and policy of Premier McBride. He will probably explain his action to his constituents and sit hereafter on the Conservative side.

Another Bomb Outrage In Gotham.

New York, April 1.—Explosion of a bomb in the basement of an East 38th street tenement yesterday shook the structure to its foundations, shattered every pane of glass in it and created a panic. There have been several explosions in the vicinity recently.

"Port Mann."

Vancouver, B.C., April 1.—Port Mann will be the name of the city on the Fraser River which is to be brought into existence by the C.N.R. Lots will probably be auctioned.

One of the Rasmussen children performing on a wire in a nickel theatre at Brantford, was severely injured by the wire breaking and letting her fall upon a seat.

FOUR MEN LOST.

Sault Ste. Marie, April 1.—March thaw has laid a bare lone trail between Grassett and Michipicoten, revealing the bodies of four men who perished while venturing over the dangerous corduroy road during the blizzards of winter.

The news was brought to the Soo by George Henderson, engineer of the Algoma Central Railroad. This trail is a hazardous one and inspires terror to those who venture on it even in summer months. There is no human habitation during the entire 52 miles.

The bodies were found at different points within a dozen miles of Michipicoten, some within a short distance of the trail, indicating that the blizzard, in which the men perished, came upon them suddenly, and that they lost their trail after it was obliterated by snow.

None of the bodies have as yet been identified, but one of the men had a letter with a Guelph postmark, from a woman named Susan Edwards. This man was about 32 years of age and had $400 in the inner vest pocket. Money was also found in the pockets of the other men. It is supposed they were on the way to mines which are in course of development in that region.

Got Married as a Joke.

Detroit, April 1.—George A. Reinhardt, son of Ald. Reinhardt of Detroit, is seeking a divorce from his wife, Mayme R. Husband. Yesterday afternoon, on the stand, he testified to making a quiet little trip to Sandwich before his marriage, where he got married for a joke.

Mrs. Reinhardt declared he abused her and said he insisted on practicing "race suicide" because his parents would not like to be called "grandpa" and "grandma."

Would-Be Suicide Escaped.

Marshville, April 1.—Jesse Adams, the young man who took poison after being arrested on a charge of theft, got out of the house of C. A. Cook, where he was under treatment, Wednesday night between 8.30 and 10 o'clock, and escaped. His present whereabouts are unknown.

Mitchell In Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, April 1.—Following the arrival yesterday of John Mitchell, the well-known labor leader, several conferences were held with a view of securing an adjustment of the strike against the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co.

To Educate Britain.

London, April 1.—The imperial missionaries of tariff reform from overseas are expected to commence their educational tour by the middle of April.

A Coming Event

Is the concert to be held in the Presbyterian church, Springville, on April 12th. Very excellent talent has been secured for the occasion. Keep the date in mind.

Passed the 100-Million Dollar Mark.

Ottawa, April 1.—The country's fiscal year closed yesterday, and it is announced that the customs revenue has passed the hundred-million dollar mark.

The revenue is an increase of two and a half millions over Mr. Fielding's estimate in his December budget speech.

The customs revenue will, it is estimated, total over $61,000,000 when the final figures are in. This is an increase of nearly three millions over the highest previous record, namely, $58,331,000 for the twelve months ending March, 1908. As compared with last year, it is an increase of a little over thirteen millions.

The receipts for the month ending yesterday total $5,979,929, an increase of $1,232,697, or about 25 per cent. as compared with March of last year.

Serious Fire at Chatham.

Chatham, April 1.—Fire at 6 o'clock yesterday morning in James King's hardware store did $12,000 damage to that place, while smoke and water damaged the stock of C. Austin & Co., dry goods, to the extent of $10,000; George Wetnell's clothing stock also suffered. Loss to building is $4,000.

Chief Pritchard was cut by falling glass and Firemen Pritchard and Ellwood were overcome by smoke in the basement, but soon recovered.

Goat Causes $75,000 Fire.

Trenton, N.J., April 1.—"King Bill," a lodge goat, was responsible Wednesday night for the destruction by fire of the Ribsam Building, one of the handsomest and most modern business structures in the heart of the city. The loss is $75,000.

The upper storeys were occupied by fraternal organizations. One of the lodges was initiating, when the goat became balky and upset a lighted lamp.

"Rider" Nullified Award.

Brantford, April 1.—The action for damages for the death of William Hawke, engineer, killed in the explosion at Ungar-Williamson Laundry last year, was concluded at the Assizes, before Justice Clute. The jury gave a verdict for $2,000, but added a rider stating that the accident could have been avoided by reasonable care on the part of the engineer. The judge thereupon dismissed the action.

To Prohibit Dealing In Futures.

Washington, April 1.—The Scott bill, prohibiting dealings in futures in the grain marts of the United States with amendments so as to apply specifically to the Cotton Exchanges only, is the indicated outcome of the deliberations of the sub-committee of the House committee on agriculture to which the anti-option proposed legislation was referred.

Tobacco Workers Strike.

Louisville, Ky., April 1.—Eleven hundred negro men, women and children, employed in one of the American Tobacco Co.'s stemmeries here, struck yesterday for an increase of one-half of one per cent. per pound for stemming.

Nearly 2,000 tobacco workers are now on strike, and other walkouts are expected.

GREAT LOSS OF TIME.

Educationists at Toronto Attack Old Spelling Methods.

Toronto, April 1.—The 49th annual convention of the Ontario Educational Association held its closing sessions in the university building yesterday. "It has been without doubt one of the most successful and prosperous gatherings ever held by the association," said retiring President Henry Ward.

William Metford, speaking in part from his experience in teaching Italians to read English, gave a paper on the loss occasioned by our irrational spelling. First, there is the stultification of the child's reasoning powers. He showed by quotation from several eminent educators and examples that the habit of learning without or contrary to understanding and reason, formed in the spelling lessons, injuriously affects the mind for the proper study of the other subjects.

In connection with the financial loss, the one due solely to carrying the load of superfluous letters has been carefully computed by Henry Holt, the well-known publisher. By actual count there are nearly five per cent. of the letters we put in words unnecessary. There, for writing, printing, type founding, stenographers' and teachers' time, etc., total as wasted over $100,000,000.

Prof. J. G. Hume of Toronto University was not at all in sympathy with the agitation for a uniformity in writing, and described the same as an abominable curse. "No two men write alike, and it is not right to ask the pupils to write along any such set of hard and fast rules."

Fires to Hide Thefts.

Windsor, April 1.—The provincial police may be asked to investigate a fire which destroyed the power plant in connection with the Fighting Island hotel property some time Wednesday morning, involving a loss of several thousand dollars. Bailiff Frank St. Louis, who took charge of the island about a week ago on a $3,000 rent claim against Pittsburg lessees, believes the fire was started by some one who wanted to wipe out the whole place, in the hope of covering up extensive theft of the hotel property. St. Louis claims he was unable to find qualities of silverware and other goods shown by the inventory.

Edward Laforest, 25 years old, wanted for over two years by Canadian authorities for burglary and arson, was arrested at Delray, Mich., by Detroit officers. He has been turned over to the Windsor authorities, and will be taken to Chatham. Laforest is charged with burning the Joy clubhouse at Mitchell's Bay, in March, 1909, after plundering the club.

All-For-Ireland League.

Cork, April 1.—The All-for-Ireland League, the object of which William O'Brien, M.P., said was to enable the Irish people to choose between his program, which would reconcile Catholic and Protestant fellow-countrymen, and John Redmond's, which set them against each other, was inaugurated yesterday.

Mr. O'Brien characterized the Nationalist party as "a mere puppet, a detestable sectarian, secret society, whose avowed purpose was to build up a system of Catholic, Orangeism, more inexcusable than its Protestant forerunner."

New Liners to Be Built.

Halifax, N.S., April 1.—That it is only the matter of a short time until the C.P.R. will build one or more new liners for the Atlantic service was the information given last night by Arthur Piers, general manager of the C.P.R. Atlantic steamship service.

Mr. Piers arrived at midnight on the mail steamer Empress of Britain, from Liverpool.

The Empress brought 1,551 passengers.

Insulted Chinese Official.

Ottawa, April 1.—Wednesday evening Dr. Siao, the secretary of the Chinese consulate, was held up near the postoffice by a well-dressed man, who spat in his face and used insulting and obscene language reflecting upon the Chinese. Siao endeavored to seize his assailant and Detective Jolliette rushed to the scene. The man, however, made good his escape. He is thought to be a doctor in the city and will be prosecuted.

Wentworth County Council will submit a by-law to raise $40,000 for a home of refuge.

There being no criminal cases at the Brantford Assizes, Mr. Justice Clute was presented with a pair of white gloves.

THE SECOND OLDEST REGIMENT IN THE DOMINION

A History of the Queen's Own Rifles of Canada Which Will in June Celebrate Its Semi-centennial, and Which Will in September Visit England to Take Part in the Aldershot Manoeuvres.

Cheers rebounded throughout the British House of Commons a few days ago when mention was made of the approaching visit of the Queen's Own Rifles of Canada to England this fall. This crack regiment will also celebrate its semi-centennial anniversary by a re-union of ex-members and a week's happy comingling at Toronto in the month of June.

There were only militia companies before 1859, when an Act was passed authorizing the formation of regiments. The first regiment was formed in Montreal, and is known as the First Prince of Wales Own Rifles; the second was formed in Toronto, and is known as the Second Regiment, Queen's Own Rifles. It is indeed a unique regiment. Men in various stations of life many occupying exalted positions, have passed through its ranks, and have feelings of tenderness for the old corps, one thought of which brings forth many happy recollections, although perhaps also days of hardship and suffering, and a sigh for those who never came back from faithful service to their country. Scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land are thousands of ex-members of the Queen's Own, and from far and near they have signified their intention of being present at the re-union. In many centres organizations have been formed, and keenest interest is being taken. The arrangements in Toronto are being made on a most magnificent scale by a committee of prominent business and professional men who have been through the ranks or are still active members of the regiment. Historical pageants depicting picturesque events in the history of Canada will last for a week, and will be participated in by hundreds of performers. On Saturday, June 18,

COLONEL SIR HENRY M. PELLATT, Knt., A.D.C.
Commandant Queen's Own Rifles of Canada

the programme will open with a garden party at Government House, given by Lieut.-Col. Hon. J. M. Gibson, himself an ex-member of the regiment. On this occasion there will be a roll call by companies. On Sunday there will be a church parade, in which 5,000 members and ex-members are expected to participate.

All ex-members, no matter where residing, will be kept personally posted as to details by communication with Mr G. I Riddell, the permanent Secretary of the Re-union Committee, 36 King street, East, Toronto. Thousands of names have been already received.

RECORD OF SERVICES.

A chronological record of the always capable and sociable regiment is of particular interest at this season.

The regiment was organized early in 1860, with six companies, being an amalgamation of the Barrie Rifle Company; the 1st and 3rd Rifle Companies, Toronto; the Highland Company, Toronto; the Rifle Company, formerly Foot Artillery, and the Highland Rifle Company, of Whitby.

On May 24, 1860, the regiment paraded with the Active Militia Force of No. 3 Military District of Upper Canada, on the west of the old Parliament Buildings, Toronto, and fired a "feu-de-joie" in honor of her late Majesty's birthday.

On the arrival of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales (the present King) in Toronto, Sept. 9, 1860, the battalion furnished a guard of honor and three days afterwards was reviewed by him.

A wave of patriotic fervor swept over Canada at the time of the "Trent Affair" at the end of 1861. The British steamer "Trent," bound from Boston to Liverpool, was fired upon and stopped on the high seas by a cannon shot from an American warship, and two passengers were taken off. In the trouble which followed thousands of volunteers sprang to arms to resist any attempt of the United States to take Canada.

It was at this time that the battalion was enlarged to ten companies by the addition of the following new and hitherto independent companies of rifles, viz.: The first and second Merchants, Victoria, Civil Service, Trinity College and University, the Barrie and Whitby companies being taken off the strength.

At the time of this reorganization there was great diversity in the uniforms of the various companies. The first three were rifle green with scarlet facings; Nos. 4 and 5 were light grey with scarlet facings; No. 6, brown with scarlet facings; No. 7, dark grey, scarlet facings; No. 8, light grey, no facings; No. 10, a Highland uniform. Later on, the rifle green uniform was adopted regimentally and is still worn, although the regiment will wear a khaki service uniform on its forthcoming trip to England.

On March 14, 1863, Lieut.-Col. Durie, the Commandant, was notified that Her Majesty had been pleased to approve of the 2nd Battalion Volunteer Militia Rifles being designated in future as the Queen's Own Rifles.

On May 25, 1863, the Chief of Toronto presented a splendid mace to the regiment. By this time the battalion had a regimental uniform, and an order for this parade said: "The companies will parade in their regimental uniforms, including shakos with the green ball."

Battalion orders of 1864 contained the following: Sgt. W. D. Otter and Corpl. James Smith will rank as staff-sergeants until further orders." That sergeant is now Brigadier-General Otter, Chief of the General Staff in command of the forces in Canada.

FENIAN RAIDS

The first active service of the Queen's Own commenced on Christmas eve 1864, when, in consequence of the "St. Alban's Raid," three administrative battalions were ordered to the frontier to prevent a repetition. The Queen's Own supplied two companies 65 strong, and on Dec. 26 they proceeded to Niagara, marching there from St. Catharines. Lieut.-Col. Durie was in command. These companies returned from Niagara after an absence of four months, April 28, 1865.

On Aug. 4, 1865, Lieut. Otter was appointed adjutant.

In consequence of Fenian alarms, a guard for the protection of the drill shed was, on Nov. 2, 1865, ordered to be furnished by the Queen's Own and 10th battalion. Owing to threats of an invasion, the Government decided upon sending a force of volunteers to the frontier, and on Nov. 20, a company of the Queen's Own were despatched to Sarnia.

This year proved to be a memorable one in the history of the regiment. The termination of the long civil war in the United States left a lot of fighters for the Federal cause doing nothing, and the invasion of Canada was the result. It was on Jan. 30 that the Queen's Own were ordered to be ready. On March 7 they were ordered to parade for active service at once.

The battalion paraded 417 strong on the following morning, and paraded daily until the end of the month when they were relieved.

On May 8, Lieut. Otter was gazetted as captain, and on the 24th, the officers presented him with a fine charger and appointments in appreciation of his zeal on behalf of the corps.

By this time the Fenian trouble took on a formidable aspect, and on the evening of May 30, Major Gilmour, who had succeeded to the command, received an order to proceed the next morning to Port Colborne with 400 men. The regiment paraded at 4 a.m., and were in Port Colborne at dinner-time, all eagerness as the Fenians were reported to have crossed at Fort Erie that morning.

SEVEN KILLED AT RIDGEWAY.

(The story of the battle at Ridgeway is well known, and though the immediate result was discouraging, its ultimate result was the withdrawal of the invading army from the soil of Canada. But it was a disastrous day for the Queen's Own. Seven were killed outright and 21 wounded, some very seriously, and two of these died a few days afterwards, while others had crippled limbs amputated. The regiment was ordered to Stratford, and on the 18th inst. were relieved from duty in Toronto.

After the regiment returned from active service in 1866 all the machinery for turning the corps out at a moment's notice were carefully preserved, and to-day no body of men can be more quickly prepared for any emergency.

The shoulder-strap, marked with the since familiar "Q.O.R.," was introduced in April, 1867.

At the opening of the first provincial parliament of Ontario, Dec. 27th, 1867, the Queen's Own formed part of the guard of honor.

Increased interest in rifle shooting, which has ever since been maintained, was aroused in 1868 with the issue of new rifles, and splendid performances at the D.R.A. meeting.

H.R.H. Prince Arthur, now the Duke of Connaught, visited Toronto in 1869, and the Queen's Own formed the guard of honor.

In the spring of 1870 came the Red River Rebellion. A dozen or more officers and men of the Queen's Own others were seriously frost bitten, and a few of the rioters received bayonet wounds.

This was in the year of the Turkish war-cloud, and the officers unanimously offered the services of the Queen's Own to the Home Government.

The metal badge now worn by the Rifles served in the mixed force commanded by Col. Wolseley, which went to restore order in what is now Manitoba, where Louis Riel had formed a "provisional government."

In 1871 the regiment attended the first brigade camp at Niagara, and it was in this year that a team of Canadian riflemen first went to represent their country at Bisley. Five members of the Queen's Own, including the late Dr. Oronhyatekha, were on this team.

Lieut.-Col. Gillmour retired in 1875, and was succeeded by Lieut.-Col. Otter.

On Sunday, Oct. 2nd, 1875, the regiment was called out to aid the Toronto authorities in preventing trouble between Protestants and Catholics, but there was no serious disturbance.

THE BELLEVILLE RIOTS.

More active service fell to the lot of the Queen's Own in 1877. On New Year's Day, the regiment was ordered to Belleville, where Grand Trunk employees were on strike, and were stirring things up. Several of the volunteers were wounded by missiles, and regiment on headgear was authorized Feb. 7th, 1878. On May 24th that year, and in 1879, the Queen's Own carried off the honors at a review in Montreal. On many occasions since this the regiment visited various places in Canada on the "24th," and has invariably repeated the success attained in Montreal. At several of these reviews American regiments have been present, but they were entirely in another class.

The signal corps organized by the late Major Villiers Sankey, and the ambulance corps, organized by the late Dr. Leslie, paraded for the first time in public Nov. 12th, 1881.

The field service forage cap, as worn to-day, was adopted in 1882, and the "Sergeants' Mess" was inaugurated in the same year.

The name of the battalion was changed from "Queen's Own Rifles of Toronto," to "Queen's Own Rifles of Canada," Jan. 13, 1882.

For the second time, Lieut.-Col. Otter went to Wimbledon in command of the Canadian team in 1883.

In February, 1884, Major A. A. Miller succeeded Lieut.-Col. Otter, who was transferred to the Infantry School Corps.

REBELLION OF 1885.

The story of the second Northwest Rebellion and its terrible hardships has been told and retold in every Canadian household. On March 27, 1885, the Queen's Own, among other regiments, were ordered to parade. On the 30th inst., over 250 of the Queen's Own Rifles left with the detachments for the front. The regiment figured prominently in the famous battle of Cut Knife. The details of the fight form one of the most stirring stories in Canadian history, and the honorable part played in it by the Queen's Own will be for all time a subject of pride to the admirers of the regiment. In this action eight men were killed and fourteen wounded in Lieut.-Col. Otter's column. Of the wounded five were Queen's Own.

Several officers of the Queen's Own Rifles distinguished themselves in the subsequent fight at Fish Creek, and ex-members of the regiment, connected with other corps, were wounded.

On the return of the corps to Toronto, July 23, a never-to-be-forgotten reception was tendered them.

The medals for the campaign were presented May 13, 1886.

For the next few years the Queen's Own Rifles prospered as a smart, progressive regiment, all the time improving and exhibiting marked efficiency in reviews, sham battles, and training camps. The social side has been ever prominent, and has done much for the regiment.

The bugle band, which has made an international reputation impossible to excel, was organized in 1863, and was placed in the care of the present Bugle-Major Chas. Swift in 1879. It's the pride of the regiment.

In 1899 Lieut. Col. Hamilton succeeded Lieut.-Col. Allen, who had succeeded Lieut.-Col. Miller

Major-General H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught again inspected the regiment, May 30, 1890.

Lieut.-Col. Hamilton was succeeded in the command by Major Delamere in March, 1896.

The Queen's Own Rifles was well represented in the military contingent selected by the Militia Department to represent Canada in the impressive Diamond Jubilee celebrations in London in 1897. Major H. M. Pellatt (now Sir Henry) commanded the rifle quota.

The Queen's Own also contributed a large number of men to the Canadian contingents that went to South Africa.

Ottawa, April 1.—Local geologists somewhat discount the reported coal discovery in Northern Ontario. They say it is lignite, having about 80 per cent. of the heating quality of coal, and that the bed has been known to the geological survey here since 1875. Its commercial export value is doubtful.

A Lesson to Britain.

Cape Town, April 1.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Commenting on the success of Canada's negotiations with the United States, The Cape Town Times draws attention to the obvious lesson which these events convey to Britain. "THE GEISHA" DELIGHTFULLY PRESENTED BY CLEVER PETERBORO' AMATEURS

Japanese Comic Opera Found Great Favor With Large Audience at Grand Last Night—Acting and Singing of the Company of a Finished and Very Pleasing Character.

"The Geisha," one of the most pretentious and interestingly written of contemporary comic operas was given a highly successful presentation at the Grand last night by the Peterborough Amateur Operatic Company under the capable direction of Mr. R. J. Devey. The book and music of "The Geisha," (the latter by Sidney Jones) are of a superior order and a picturesque and entertaining story is told as the plot of the piece develops. The sentimental theme is very pretty and the dialogue and action of the play are clever and refined.

The prominent feature of "The Geisha," however, is its delightful music, which is tuneful and ear haunting without being in the least ordinary or reminiscent. All of the numerous numbers met with the enthusiastic approbation of the audience and several of them were repeatedly encored. The environment of the play naturally gives ample and attractive groundwork for charming lyrical and musical effects and the wide opportunities have been splendidly appreciated by the writers and composer.

Mr. Devey has not only shown commendable judgment in the selection of the presenting company, but the excellence of the acting and the intelligence of expression in the singing in both the solo numbers and ensembles indicate masterly musical direction.

The costumes are rich and appropriate and striking pictures were presented in the several ensembles and special groupings. The stage settings were of a character also to impart the desired background and atmosphere.

"The Geisha" should be an important factor in the musical section of the Earl Grey trophy competition and Mr. Devey has the sincere support of the citizens in the enterprise he has shown in the organization of the company and their congratulations for the very satisfactory presentation of the opera. "The Geisha" will be repeated this evening and independent of the drawing power of the performance last night a large audience is assured as the advance sale is a heavy one. The offering certainly merits the patronage of the citizens both on account of the fact that its appearance in the competition will give very desirable publicity to Peterborough in a musical sense and also because of the real merit and entertaining qualities of the production.

Where every one did so well, special references are perhaps not necessary, but one would be doing an injustice to Miss Lavina Hallihan if one did not pause to compliment her most heartily upon her splendid work in the title-role. This talented young lady, whose magnificent soprano has been a source of unmitigated pleasure to Peterborough audiences, upon so many occasions, has never appeared to greater advantage, and she scored a personal triumph. Her singing of "A Geisha's Life" in the first act, was undoubtedly the feature of the production and took the audience by storm, while her solo number in the second portion, "The Star of Asia," a supplementary number, was not far behind in point of merit. Her perfect enunciation, her clear, sweet, powerful voice, which loses none of its purity or sonorousness in the higher registers, made her solos things of beauty indeed, and the enthusiasm of the audience knew no bounds. In addition to her delightful vocalism, however, Miss Hallihan is to be congratulated also upon her splendid acting, her attractive stage presence and natural and unaffected manner allowing her to artistically interpret the important role she had in hand. She was presented with a beautiful bouquet in the second act, and the the audience recognised the tribute with enthusiastic applause.

Mrs. R. J. Devey, as Molly Seamore, threw life and vim into her part, and added much to the success of the occasion by her clever work in the role. The score gave her several opportunities to display her singing ability, and she took full advantage of the openings offered her. Her work throughout was of a superior calibre. Mrs. J. E. Firth, as Lady Constance, looked and acted the part of a member of the British nobility with considerable success, and was true and natural in her methods, while Miss Lillian Dean scored a success as Juliette Diamant, a part that afforded opportunities for finished work. The minor feminine parts were in good hands. Miss Beach, as Nami, did good work, and Miss Delaire, Miss Quartermaine, Miss Horsfield, and Miss Primeau, as Geishas, sang with decided success. Miss Daisy Wood, Miss Shannon and Miss Collinson, as the three English ladies, gave a good account of themselves.

To Mr. George Chandler, who was cast as Reginald Fairfax, a good deal of the work fell, and he demonstrated that the role was entrusted to the proper person by his finished portrayal of the part of the English officer. He had several chances to exhibit his charming tenor in solo work, and his vocal numbers were happily received, while his acting throughout was good. Mr. Maclaren, as Wun-Hi, the Chinese proprietor of a tea-house, had the principal comedy role and extracted the last ounce of fun out of an unusually amusing part. His quaint language and funny appearance and gestures elicited continuous laughter, while his solo song and dance was one of the gems of the second act. His role is a long one and he is to be praised for his skilful portrayal.

Mr. Nat Greenhalgh was cast as The Marquis Imari, a characterization that his stature and voice eminently fit him for, and he gave a finished conception of the Japanese potentate. Mr. John King exhibited his splendid bass voice effectively in several solo numbers that were among the most appreciated features of the programme, and Messrs. Hickey and Sutcliffe, as English officers, also sang well. Mr. Lee had not many opportunities as Captain Katna, but in his solo in the first act, showed that he has a splendid tenor, which the audience would have enjoyed more often. Master Cyril Devey did some good work as the Midshipman.

The merit of the performance, considering that it was produced solely by amateurs, was surprising. The first act, which, by the way, is all that the company will present in Toronto, was a veritable gem. Considerable of the time taken up in rehearsing has been devoted to this act, as the company knew they would be only called upon to give one act, in the competition, and specialized upon that portion of the play. The presentation went through with a swim and zest and was wholly enjoyable. The acting throughout was uniformly good and the vocalism of the principals superior to most of the professional companies that have appeared here, and none of the musical shows that have graced the boards of the Grand have had such a splendid singing chorus. The cast has been chosen with judgment and the result was a most artistic production. The costumes and scenic investure had been carefully looked after, and a charming series of stage pictures was presented, the ensemble numbers being well arranged. In fact there could be no criticism offered in regard to any side of the presentation, and the audience was more than delighted with the offering.

The story of "The Geisha" is too well known to theatre-goers to require any explanation in these columns. It is enough to say that the production is a comic opera standard of the older and better variety as superior to the frothy American musical comedy as day is to night.

WANT IT IN WRITING

AGITATION IN BRITAIN TO DRAW UP CONSTITUTION.

The Fact That the Basis of English Government Does Not Appear In State Form In the Books Gives Rise to Confusions Like the Present Budget Fight—It Would Eliminate a Deal of Trouble.

The Englishman has an immense belief in anything which is put in writing or in print, "notes Public Opinion of London, and when he has told his opponent or customer to "put that in writing," he thinks he has made himself secure.

Strangely enough, the Englishmen has never put his Constitution into writing. The bulwark of his liberties is an intangible thing consisting of precedents, understandings, and such like things—hence the recent quarrels about what is constitutional and what is not.

To-day the question is being asked whether England ought not to have a written Constitution like the United States and other nations.

Burke wrote in 1791 that "we ought to understand the admired Constitution of England according to our measure, and to venerate where we are not able presently to comprehend."

Hallam, too, said that "the Constitution of England must be to inquisitive men of all countries — far more to ourselves—an object of superior interest."

And yet, as Prof. Dicey says, in his classic book, "The Constitution was marked by more than one transcendent quality which in the eyes of our fathers raised it far above the imitations, counterfeits, or parodies which have been set up during the last one hundred years throughout the civilized world; no precise date could be named as the day of its birth; no definite body of persons could claim to be its creators, no one could point to the document which contained its clauses; it was, in short, a thing by itself which Englishmen and foreigners alike should 'venerate where they are not able presently to comprehend.'"

Prof. Dicey says that a professor of Constitutional Law in England "has good reason to envy professors who belong to countries such as France, Belgium, and the United States, endowed with Constitutions of which the terms are to be found in printed documents known to all citizens and accessible to every man who is able to read."

Tocqueville said that "the English Constitution has no real existence," and so far as documents are concerned that is true.

Freeman declared that "We now have a whole system of political morality, a whole code of precepts for the guidance of public men, which will not be found in any page of either the statute or the common law, but which are in practice held hardly less sacred than any principle embodied in the Great Charter, or in the Petition of Right. In short, by the side of our written law there has grown up an unwritten or conventional Constitution."

Here are some of the items in the unwritten Constitution which have the force of law. Prof. Dicey quotes them as examples "of the precepts to which Mr. Freeman refers."

"A Ministry which is outvoted in the House of Commons is in many cases bound to retire from office."

"A Cabinet, when outvoted on any vital question may appeal to the country by means of a dissolution."

"If an appeal to the electors goes against the Ministry they are bound to retire from office, and have no right to dissolve Parliament a second time."

"The Cabinet are responsible to Parliament as a body for the general conduct of affairs."

"If there is a difference of opinion between the House of Lords and the House of Commons, the House of Lords ought at some point not definitely fixed to give way, and should the peers not yield and the House of Commons continue to enjoy the confidence of the country, it becomes the duty of the crown or of its responsible advisers to create or to threaten to create enough new peers to override the opposition of the House of Lords and thus restore harmony between the two branches of the Legislature."

These things are all quoted by Prof. A. V. Dicey in his "Law of the Constitution." "They are," he says, "all constantly acted upon, and since they cannot be enforced by any court of law, have no claim to be considered laws." But they make up that unwritten Constitution under which the English people live.

At the present time not a few British journals of high standing are demanding a written Constitution, in order that the powers of both Houses of Parliament shall be clearly defined, thus preventing such confusion as that which has arisen over the budget fight.

Luminous Mushrooms.

A traveler in Australia found a very large mushroom weighing five pounds. He took it to the house in which he was for the time being residing and hung it up to dry in the sitting room. Entering after dark, he was amazed to see a beautiful soft light emanating from the fungus. It continued to give out light for many nights, gradually decreasing until it was wholly dry. Many kinds of fungi have this peculiarity. Humboldt describes some he saw in the mines. The glow in rotten wood is caused by its containing the threads of light-giving fungi.

A Cat Operation.

"I saw something to-day that pushes the limit," said a young married man who had just returned from the cat and dog hospital. He had been there to take his wife's pet cat, that had broken her leg.

"What was that?" naturally the wife asked him.

"A cat that was being treated for a mole on its nose. There wasn't a thing on earth the matter with the animal except that it had a tiny mole. The owner of the cat, a fashionably dressed young woman heavy with furs, said it spoiled the animal's beauty. Whoever heard of such a thing? Torturing a poor cat just to have a mole removed from its nose."

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

Household Notes

If there is a bit of cauliflower left over from a meal, try dipping it first into crumbs, then into egg, and again into crumbs. If not enough to serve separately, then fry in deep fat and use as a garnish to any meat or luncheon dish.

Cold cooked beef, whether boiled, broiled or roasted, chopped fine, mixed with cooked potatoes, also chopped fine, and moistened with gravy and milk, makes a most acceptable dish. Put into a pudding dish, cover the top with grated cheese and bake.

Jellied salad is nice for a change. Chop bits of celery rather fine, mix with shredded lettuce or flaked cabbage and saturate thoroughly with a well-seasoned French dressing. Mix a teaspoonful of granulated gelatine in a little water, blend this well through the whole, press into a crockery mold or small bowl, and put in a cool place to become firm.

THE PROVINCE HAS 146 FEWER TAVERN LICENSES OPERATIVE THIS YEAR

Report Shows a Steady Decrease in the Revenue as a Result of Local Option Victories Each Year--Reduction in Licenses of all Sorts Since 1874 is 3,857.

Toronto, April 2.—Issued by the license branch of the Provincial Secretary's office yesterday, the 34th annual report respecting the operation of the liquor license laws of the province shows that a reduction of 112 tavern and shop licenses were made in 1908-9, as compared to the previous year, and for the current license year (1909-10) to date, there have been issued only 1,863 tavern and 244 shop licenses, which represents a further reduction of 149.

This is accounted for by the increasing number of municipalities in which local option is being brought into force and the reduction of licenses authorized by municipal bylaws.

The form of the report has been somewhat improved. The figures given this year are more compactly arranged and show more clearly the operation of the act for the license year.

A statement of license revenue for the financial year of 1907-08, and up to Oct. 31, 1909, shows a decrease each year, thus:

1907—Brewers' warehouse licenses, $5,533.34; breweries licenses, $28,-836.20; distillers, $43,160.66; wholesale, $9,300.25; tavern, shop, club, transfers and fines, $479,918.15; refund for collection of revenue and premium on bonds, $2,817; refund on detective services, $195; total $567,126.60.

1908—Brewers' warehouse licenses, $6,900; brewers, $30,562.50; distillers, $44,666.67; wholesalers, $9,487.75; tavern, shop, transfers and fines, $485,-098.44; refund for collection of revenue and premium on fidelity bonds, $1,656.75; total, $577,771.11.

1909—Brewers warehouses, $7,000; brewers, $31,400; distillers, $44,666.67; wholesalers, $8,600; sample and commission licenses, $3,900; seized liquors, $1,133.83; taverns, shop licenses, transfers and fines, $254,695.29; refund for collection of revenue and premium on fidelity bonds, $2,186.75; fines from L.O., Thamesville, $146.52; total, $353,929.06.

There were nine more fines imposed for selling liquor in local option sections in 1909 than the previous year, and $1,035 more collected.

There were 3,857 less licenses of all varieties- tavern, shop, wholesale, vessels and club--issued last year than in the initial year 1874, and 2,783 less tavern licenses. Thirty-four years ago there were 4,793 tavern licenses as against 2,010 last year; 1,307 shop licenses, as against 253; 52 wholesale, as against 23; 33 vessels, against 0; no club licenses, against 42; total $6,-195 as against 2,328.

The aggregate amount received for licenses in all municipalities last year was $923,903.23, of which the province received $409,654.19.

The total amount received in fines in all licensed districts last year was $34,330.25; for transfers of licenses, $41,068.50.

There were 237 more commitments to jail for drunkenness in 1909 than the previous year, throughout the province, and 1,297 more than in 1895. There were 252 cases of infraction of the liquor license act prosecuted last year, 168 being convictions and 84 dismissals.

Toronto, April 2.—Nine arrests were made yesterday morning when the police raided the brokerage offices of P. H. Patriarche & Co., at Scott and Wellington streets, at 10.30 yesterday morning. Two men were taken as keepers and seven as frequenters. At precisely the same time a raid was arranged for the Buffalo offices of the firm. W. J. Smart, 28 years, 26 Simpson avenue, alleged to be the manager of the office, and J. A. Harrington, 38 years, alleged to be the manager of the Buffalo office, who is staying at the King Edward Hotel, were charged as keepers of a common gaming house in that it is declared that the place is a "bucket shop." Ten detectives, in charge of Staff Inspector George Kennedy, made the raid which was effected quietly, and the prisoners were all walked to headquarters, save E. S. Cox, who preferred to hire a carriage. The books and effects of the office were also removed. Telegraph instruments were also seized. The police declare that these instruments were the most wicked parts of the outfit being reputed to run direct to New York, while as a matter of fact, they extended only to Buffalo, entering the firm's office there.

IS GOING FROM BAD TO WORSE

Montreal, April 2.—Joseph Drouin, a member of the bar of Montreal was recently suspended from practice by the council of the Bar for improper conduct in dealing with a client. He had his case re-opened to offer new evidence when it was found this evidence was doctored. Yesterday seven months' suspension was added to the sentence of the Bar council, making thirteen months in all.

BREAK WINDOW GLASS TRUST

Pittsburg, Pa., April 2.—It was learned last night that after three months' investigation, federal officers are ready to present to a special grand jury here next Monday, evidence that the Imperial Window Glass Co. is a trust in violation of the Sherman Act.

The corporation, formed under the laws of West Virginia, is said to control 33 large window glass plants in eleven states.

Australia Wants Juveniles.

London, April 2.—Sir George Reid, speaking in London, said he was sent to increase emigration to Australia. He is making very strong representations to the Government to arrange for thousands of poor law children to go to Australia. Juvenile emigration is the best emigration, he says.

Won't Affect the West.

Fernie, B.C., April 2.—The general strike ordered in the bituminous coal districts in the United States is not liable to cause any disturbance among the miners of the Crow's Nest district and Southern Alberta.

VILLAGE ENGULFED BY LAVATIC FLOW

Catania, Sicily, April 2.—Prof. Ricco, director of the Mount Aetna observatory, has been forced to abandon his post after passing hours of terror there. He said last night: "One could not stand the deafening and horrible roar of the volcano for more than one day. It would certainly drive him mad."

Late yesterday the lavatic flow engulfed Cavaliero, a village of fifty houses. The inhabitants escaped unhurt.

Messina, April 2.—Seven slight earth shocks, accompanied by subterranean rumblings and explosions, have been felt here since Thursday night. No damage, however, has resulted.

SHORT SHIFT FOR THE VETO

London, April 2.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Canadian Associated Press learns that the Government will give only a week's consideration to the veto bill after its introduction.

It is expected the bill will be presented to the Lords before the end of April. Should the Government fail to pass the veto proposals through the Lords they will not resign, but will advise dissolution and ask Parliament for a vote on account to carry them through a general election.

It is anticipated that dissolution will take place before the end of May.

STRIKERS IN UGLY MOOD

Police Are Guarding Steel Plant at Hamilton—Nearly 1,000 Men on Strike.

Hamilton, April 2.—Practically the whole of the police force reported at six o'clock this morning to protect the Hamilton Steel Plant from the foreign laborers on strike. Both the company and the police look for trouble. Carlo Basle, 390 North Sherman avenue, was arrested last night near the works on a charge of carrying a revolver and a knife. His story is that he is not a striker, but remained at work all day, and was afraid to go home for fear of the strikers. He says the foreman gave him the revolver to protect himself with.

Nearly 1,000 laborers struck yesterday morning for an increase from 16 to 18 cents an hour. They were evidently in an ugly mood, and the company lost no time in applying for police protection. Chief Smith and a posse of armed men guarded both the Queen street and the east end plants of the company all day, and more officers were kept in reserve. The strikers were hustled off the ground just as fast as they dropped their tools. No one was injured, although an attack was made on Constable Duffy.

The journeymen carpenters and the linemen employed by the Cataract Power Co. have made demands for an increase in wages.

MR. FOSTER TO RETIRE

Retiring From Political Life for a Long Rest--Changes in Party.

Special to the Review.

Toronto, April 2.—A despatch to the News from Ottawa says Hon. George E. Foster is retiring from political life for a long rest. Ex-Judge Doherty, Montreal, will be Borden's first lieutenant.

The Conservative party will be reorganized with new whips. Mr. Foster is much depressed as a result of the libel suit. He may not resign immediately, but has given up active politics for good.

ARRANGING NEXT TARIFF CONFERENCE

Ottawa, April 2.—The conference between the Canadian and United States Governments, to be held with a view of arranging a reciprocal trade treaty, will not begin till the end of April, or possibly later.

It is hoped a conference may be arranged for a date early in May, for which Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. W. S. Fielding and possibly Sir Richard Cartwright will go to Washington.

It is pointed out here that the loss of customs revenue resulting from the tariff concessions will reach $250,000, but only $100,000 will be in duties on United States goods, the balance being on foreign imports, the concessions granted being made to the whole world. This sum represents so much saving by the Canadian consumer.

GRAND TRUNK AT STRATFORD

Stratford, April 2.—Yesterday morning the city officials, including Mayor Dingman, Ald. Currie and City Solicitor Robertson had a conference with the G.T.R. officials, Vice-President E. H. Fitzhugh and General Transportation Manager W. G. Brownlee.

The railway will build at once a fine new station and additional shops, to cost $200,000, and expend $50,000 more on yard re-arrangement. The new station will be placed on Shakespere street, east of Nile street, and all the tracks will run parallel past it. The new station will be of two storeys, with commodious waiting and dining-rooms, with express and baggage-rooms on ground floor, with office upstairs for clerks and despatchers.

"ALL OVER IN THIRTY DAYS"

St. Louis, Mo., April 2.—"Don't be alarmed over the outcome of this affair; don't be afraid that we will not be able to sign up an agreement. It will all be over within thirty days. Anyhow, this is good fishing weather," said Thos. L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Works of North America, in addressing 3,000 Illinois mine workers yesterday.

"It isn't work we want," he continued, "we are willing to do our part, but we want a full and complete share of the results of our labor and we never will be satisfied until we get it."

In an interview Mr. Lewis said the miners would win in all their demands within thirty days in all fields with the possible exception of Illinois and Western Pennsylvania. In these fields, he said, more time might be necessary.

John Lynch, a Newfoundlander, aged sixty, was fatally burned by hot slag at the Sydney steel plants.

NO ADVERTISEMENTS GO INTO CONSERVATIVE PAPERS

Richard Blain Asks Eor a List of Those in Which Govern- Advertises and Minister Humorously Gives Him a Blank Sheet of Paper.

Ottawa, April 2.—The Commons spent most of yeaterday on public works' estimates during which dredging and advertising as organized by Hon. Wm. Pugsley came in for a good deal of criticism.

In the evening, Mr. Pugsley displayed his suave humor in a striking incident. Just before the dinner recess, Conservative Whip Blain asked him to produce a list of Ontario newspapers in which dredging advertisements were published. Subsequently he changed his request to that of a list of Conservative papers in which the advertisements appear.

When the House resumed last night, Mr. Blain asked for the list, and Mr. Pugsley handed a paper to a page, and went on with explanations about another matter.

A moment later Mr. Blain arose. "The Minister has not given me what I asked for," he said. "I wanted a list of the newspapers in which the advertisements appeared, and he has sent me a blank sheet of paper."

"I think," replied Mr. Pugsley sweetly, "that the hon. gentleman is mistaken. I have sent him exactly what he asked for. If he casts his mind back, he will remember that he first asked for a list of the newspapers in which the advertisements appeared, but later said that he would be satisfied with a list of the Conservative papers. I have sent him that. If I had given him a sheet of paper with any names on it, it would have been a false return. So how could I do anything else?"

Dr. Sproule severely lectured the Minister on "playing a boy's prank," and then the debate turned into the familiar dispute as to whether the patronage list had been abolished.

The Opposition said "No." Dr. Pugsley said "Yes." Finally Pugsley settled the matter with a burst of characteristic candor.

"There's no use being hypocritical over these things," he said. "If my hon. friend Mr. Blain were in my position to-morrow, he would not give a single advertisement to a Liberal newspaper."

"How do you know it?" asked Mr. Blain.

"I know it by my hon friend's appearance," replied the Minister calmly. "I know it by the satirical look on his face."

In reply to R. L. Borden, who asked what further Government legislation the House might expect this session, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said there would be some resolutions to amend the legislation regarding subsidies to dry docks, the renewal of some railway subsidies, but no new ones, an amendment of the Ottawa Improvement Commission Act, and legislation regarding judicial appointments rendered necessary by the action of the local Legislatures.

The Premier's resolution that the House should meet every sitting day hence until the end of the session at 11 a.m. was passed.

The House then went into committee on public works' estimates.

Mr. Pugsley explained that the $90,-000 vote for Tiffin Harbor would about complete the work of dredging that harbor to depth of twenty-five feet at low water. This was one of the works recommended by the commission on transportation. The Grand Trunk was spending several millions at Tiffin and expected to be able to divert to Canadian ports much of the grain trade now going to Buffalo.

Mr. Bradbury asked Mr. Pugsley if it was proposed to construct a fishway at St. Andrew's locks. He said he had discussed the matter with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and the Deputy Minister had agreed that a fishway should be provided so that fish can get up the Red River from Lake Winnipeg. Mr. Pugsley said the matter had not yet been drawn to his attention, but that he would inquire into it.

Mr. German expressed the opinion that no public funds should be expended on Port Credit Harbor. It was rumored that private interests had acquired it with a view to selling it to the Government after improvements had been made at a profit.

Mr. Blain of Peel did not agree to this proposal. If there was any such scheme afoot, he said, it was confined to the political friends of the Government.

It has been arranged that consideration of H. H. Miller's anti-gambling bill will be taken up in the Commons on Wednesday next.

It is expected that there will be a somewhat protracted discussion in the committee stage of the bill, but the probabilities are that it will pass.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Miss Annie Davidson of Oxford Mills, Grenville County, is 104 years old.

Ludger Genest, aged 62, chief of the Hull fire and police departments for 37 years, died yesterday morning.

Maude Adams will play the role of "Chantecler" in Frohman's American production of the Rostand play.

While walking from one coach to another, Boyd Grey, aged 9, of Pakenham, Ont., fell from a C.P.R. train north of Chalk River, Ont., on Wednesday night and received concussion of the brain.

Apparently having failed to bring about an end to the car strike in Philadelphia, John Mitchell, accompanied by Denis Hayes, fourth vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, went to New York yesterday.

The next Fourth of July in New York will be noiseless. Mayor Gaynor decided yesterday that the order of former Fire Commissioner Hayes, that no permits for the retail sale of fireworks between June 10 and July 10 be issued, shall stand.

The New York police yesterday reported that they had traced another girl to young Wolter's flat, but are unable to find out what became of her. The detectives give her name as Elsie Schwartz, who is said to have called on Wolter the day before Ruth Wheeler was killed.

Wilbur H. Turner, a saloonkeeper of Buffalo, is dead; Charles Woodcock, a farmer, is fatally injured, and G. N. Adwen of Tonawanda is seriously injured as the result of a collision between an automobile and a line of farmers' rigs on the Lewiston road near Niagara Falls, N.Y., last night.

ASSISTANCE FROM THE GOVERNMENT

Victoria, B.C., April 2.—The Provincial Government has granted $1,000 to the joint board of trade of Victoria and Vancouver towards promoting an appeal to the Railway Commission against C.P.R. discrimination in freight rates, through which British Columbia shippers suffer.

The money is toward the cost of collecting supporting data, and an expert in rates will be engaged in this behalf.

MENELIK MAY NOT BE DEAD

Paris, April 2.—Although the announcement was made to the world on Wednesday that King Menelik of Abyssinia was dead, it now seems possible that the report of the demise of this picturesque ruler is as false as earlier assertions to the same effect.

The Foreign Office yesterday received a despatch from French Minister Bryce at Addis Abeba, dated Thursday, which made no mention of the death.

SAYS CANADA GAINS FROM UNITED STATES

Washington, D.C., April 2.—A report was submitted to Congress yesterday by Senator Billingham, chairman of the joint immigration commission, in regard to the immigration situation in Canada.

Probably the most important statement made in the report is that Canada wants immigrants whose purpose is to enter agricultural pursuits either as owners, tenants or laborers, and desires to exclude those immigrants whose presence would tend to the congestion of towns and cities.

Another striking feature of the report is the comparison of immigration into Canada during the past decade with that into the United States. This shows that while 70 per cent. of Canada's immigrants during that period came from Northern and Western Europe, and only 30 per cent. from southern and eastern Europe, the reverse was true in regard to the immigrants entering the United States.

Of the total number of immigrants going from the United States to Canada during the past three years more than seven-eighths were classed as farmers or farm laborers.

CALGARY HAS HOPES OF HAVING SCANDAL

Calgary, Alta., April 2.—What appears to be a scandal in Calgary has come to light.

On March 28, D'Arcy Tate, solicitor of the G.T.R. of this city, approved a general location route map of the Grand Trunk's entry into Calgary, the first official document of this nature that has been received.

City Clerk Gillies, it is alleged, with one or two exceptions, kept the matter dark, only putting Mayor Jamieson wise and some real estate men. The latter got busy and took options on the right of way as taken from the map, which should have been laid before the City Council writs' session on Tuesday.

Mayor Jamieson's only explanation of the papers not being given to council is that he had seen them, but had done nothing with them.

WINDSOR CUSTOMS RECEIPTS ARE LARGE

Windsor, April 2.—A. L. Iron, proprietor of the British-American Brewery, yesterday purchased the Fleming Block for $50,000. It is one of the best business and office blocks in the city.

All records for receipts have been beaten at the Windsor customs office. Collections for March totalled $176,-080.51. In March, 1909, they were $99,-935.79. Receipts for the fiscal year which closed yesterday, were $1,080,-080.29. The increase is said to be due largely to the prosperity of Windsor merchants. The number of importations this year over last, showed an increase of 5,000.

Estimates given on Plumbing Heating and Wiring Contracts

The Daily Review

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1910.

THE WATER COMMISSIONERS

The Water Commissioners have now the proposal of the Canadian General Electric Company under consideration. The people of Peterborough will await with interest their view of the situation. If they can give any further information on the question or make any suggestions which, while securing to Peterborough the great advantages that would attend the construction of the new buildings and plant of the Canadian General Electric Company, may enable the city to get better terms from the company, their proposals should receive careful consideration.

LITTLE BY LITTLE

Little by little the Laurier Government is destroying the National Policy of protection which has made Canada great and prosperous. By striking a few industries at a time it is supposed that there will be no general outcry. To manufacturers in general the Government says: "Never mind, don't make a fuss; you are not hit."

But does anyone know who will be hit next?

At one time it is the woollen industry that gets a severe blow, at another time the leather industry and the lithographing industry are selected for reduction.

Protection to home industry should be based on principle. All should be treated alike. To sacrifice one home industry in order to gain a foreign market for others is unfair, unjust and inimical to the progress and prosperity of the country.

THE WORDING OF IT

In case of making a power contract with the Canadian General Electric Company the greatest care should be taken to see that the interests of the city are fully guarded in the wording of the contract.

Some years ago the city of Toronto had to decide the question whether the city should itself operate the electric railway or give the franchise to a company on conditions that reserved to the city almost as complete control of the service as if under municipal direction. The company promoters who asked for the franchise, said that the city would have the advantages of public ownership and private ownership combined. With this understanding the franchise was given to a company for a long term of years and it was supposed that the contract completely protected the city in its right to control the railway service and decide upon what streets the cars should run. But later on disputes arose between the company and the city, and when these matters were referred to the courts, although the Canadians courts decided in favor of the city, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided in favor of the company. The whole trouble was in the wording of the contract.

Now, if the city of Peterborough comes to terms with the Canadian General Electric Company, the very best advice should be obtained as regards the wording of the contract.

YOUR OWN CONSTITUENCY

Every Canadian elector owes a duty to Canada. That duty is to assist by his vote and influence in electing to the Dominion Parliament and the Provincial Legislature clean, honest, patriotic men. There may be difference of opinion on questions of policy, but on the question of purity and probity every citizen should insist that the record of the candidate who aspires to represent him in Parliament must be unimpeachable.

Your representative should be a man who will not bribe and cannot be bribed, a man absolutely incorruptible. He should be a man who would not tolerate bribery, corruption, or misappropriation of public funds in his own party, a man who would stand up in Parliament and condemn his own leader, if that leader tried to prevent an inquiry into the methods of conducting business in any department of the Government.

We of this generation, are the founders of Canada. The future of the nation will be very largely determined during the next twenty-five years! At no future time in the history of Canada will the individual Canadian have the same influence in the making of the nation.

There are now over seven and a half million people in Canada. It is expected that there will be eight millions next year. These eight million people will, through their representatives in Parliament, largely shape the future of a country vast enough and rich enough to support three hundred million people. It is a great responsibility. Are you doing your duty in your own constituency?

London, April 2.—As a branch of the Central unemployed body, a league has been formed in South Australia. Animal Was Too Sore and Lame to Work—Quickly Cured by "Nerviline."

"I have had a long experience in treating horses, and I can safely say that I know of no liniment for strains, sprains, and swelling that is so useful around the stable as Nerviline." Thus writes Mr. Joshua E. Murchison, from his home, Crofts Hill P. O. I had a fine young mare that wrenched her right fore leg, and from the shoulder down she was stiff, sore, and swollen. I applied Nerviline, and it worked like a charm; in fact, that mare was in shape to work a day after I used Nerviline.

The Giant's Strength

...By...

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1909, by Harper & Brothers.

"No, dear, no," she murmured faintly. "It isn't your fault. It's only that I'm going—going—home."

She dropped away again into what seemed like sleep. Marah sat down by the armchair, fanning her.

"She'll be better now," Winship whispered to Paula. "Come and give me your final judgment on the portrait."

They slipped away silently to the end of the long room, where the woman in black and green regarded them with her eternal what and why. For a few minutes they stood side by side without speaking. The feeling was in both their hearts that they were turning their backs on death and the past to look out toward life and the future.

"You've changed it in some way," Paula observed at last.

"I thought you might like it better so."

"This seems to me Paula Trafford more as she looks every day and less as an abstract conception."

"That's it. Lady Alice said I was wrong. She said the abstract conceptions rather than the mere portraits survive best as works of art—that 'Mona Lisa' and the 'Sistine Madonna' will always be greater than any of Vandyke's cavaliers or Vigee-Lebrun's 'Marie Antoinettes.' Perhaps she's right, but in your case I prefer the more absolute likeness. You see, I was thinking of you too much as a type and too little as a lady."

"Everybody thinks of me as a type," she complained wistfully. "I have to stand for money, like the female figure on a stock exchange."

"I didn't mean that. If I thought of you as representing wealth it was that great, strange, new spirit of American wealth that is unlike everything else."

"Do you mean in the way in which it's acquired?"

"Yes, and in the way in which it's dispensed. The world has never seen money made with so little mercy, spent with so much generosity. The spectacle is quite novel and must be extremely puzzling to moralists. You can't do good with money; you can only do good by yourself. The man who robs Peter and expects to benefit mankind by paying Paul can't do what you call good to any one."

"Still," she argued, "if Paul has been fed and clothed and educated you've added something to the total of human happiness."

"Not when you've left Peter hungry and naked and brutalized and tricked of the means that were honestly his. That's the spectacle to which some of our great philanthropic financiers are treating us, and the angels who look on most often be in doubt as to whether to laugh or to weep."

"It seems to me cruel to say that," she said, flushing still more deeply.

"So it is. But it's only the cruel inherent in the situation when Paul reflects on the charity offered him through the robbery of Peter."

"Does he often do that?"

"Perhaps not often, but he'll learn."

"When?"

"When the American people have begun to judge by standards of right and wrong rather than by those of material success."

"Then we shall have a long time to wait."

"If it's too long there may be a short way taken—that is, if we may judge by analogous situations in history. When moral progress is too slow to right intolerable wrongs the human race has a way of appealing to fire and sword."

"Do they gain anything by that?"

"You're only to look about you and see. The France you're living in may be bad enough, but it's heaven itself compared to what it was before the revolution. I read the same moral among every people on earth where there has been a heaping up of wealth and privilege for a few, while the many find it harder and harder to exist."

"And it is that heaping up of wealth that you take me to stand for?"

There was no indignation in her tone. In her expression there was only the look of pathetic interrogation he had caught in her portrait. Winship met her gaze calmly and frankly. Whatever he felt inwardly, the appeal of her helplessness did not make him flinch. He meant that she should understand his view of her position.

"The daughter of a great house," he said, "stands for that house in its good and its evil. Iphigenia couldn't be other than an Atrides, though she herself was innocent enough. Mme. Elisabeth couldn't be other than a Bourbon, though she herself could never have done willful wrong to any one. And Miss Paula Trafford—no, no," he broke off, "I won't say it."

"Please!" she begged. "Please! I insist!"

"Miss Paula Trafford," he went on again, "comes of a race that has had a giant's strength and has used it like—a giant! There! I've offended you, and we've been such good friends till now! Tomorrow this will have gone to the Salon, and our association together will be over. You will have your portrait, and I shall have"—

"What?" she questioned. "You will have—what?"

"I shall have the joy of having painted it. It will go where I shall probably never see it. But it will remain my work. As long as it exists it will present you as I've seen and known and understood you. That's a part of the artist's recompense that he can never lose. Nothing could take away from Pygmalion the glory of having created Galatea."

"But Galatea came to life for him."

She stopped abruptly, biting her lip. She had spoken without weighing the significance of her words. The color that came and went in her cheeks called forth a dark flush in Winship's as for the first time they stood looking at each other in emotion they made no effort to conceal. The silence that followed seemed to throb with what could not be spoken.

"She will always live for me," he said, with a slight gesture toward the portrait.

"Yes, as the woman who could never dissociate herself from the wrongs inflicted by one class upon another."

"Couldn't she?"

Winship's tone was lower, and he drew near her, looking down into her clear eyes.

"That's for you to judge," she murmured faintly.

"How?"

"I was wrong," she said, summoning all her strength to speak boldly. "I was wrong when I said that Galatea came to life. Pygmalion prayed the gods to bestow life on her. It was his prayer that wrought the miracle."

"Which means," he said slowly, drawing nearer still, "that if I prayed"—

"The gods might hear you," she finished softly, turning her eyes away.

"But if the call into life meant for Galatea the coming down from her golden pedestal, if it meant sacrifice, renunciation, the sharing of a poor man's life"—

"Roger! Quick! Come here!"

Marah's voice had the sharp ring that belongs to intense moments of existence. Winship rushed to his mother's side. Paula followed slowly.

Mrs. Winship had lifted herself in her chair and was sitting upright. Her arms were outstretched and her hands raised as though in supplication. The sightless eyes seemed to be looking straight into heaven.

"Roger!" she called in a loud, clear voice.

"Yes, mother, I'm here." He seized her hand in both of his.

"Paula!"

The voice was weaker now, but the left hand seemed to beat the air, feeling for a response. Paula clasped the trembling fingers to her breast.

Slowly, feebly and with the last act of earthly strength the dying woman drew the two hands together.

"Pardon!" she murmured.

Neither Paula nor Winship glanced at each other. They lost thought for what was happening to themselves in the sight of the passage of a soul. When their hands met it was with a firm, instinctive clasp.

"Love!" the mother sighed again and fell back among the pillows.

There was a long minute's waiting till the silence was broken by Marah's wail.

"Oh, mother, mother! Have you no word for me? I've loved you so! I've loved you so!"

The little old maid flung herself upon her knees. It seemed to her now as if she had been deprived of the last poor bit of human rights, for the blind woman never spoke again. She lingered a few days still, but before the Salon was opened and the crowds had begun to gather about her son's great work she was lying beneath a tiny, flower decked chapel up on Montparnasse.

Winship found himself in the first degrees of fame without paying any attention to the fact. Rather he accepted the fact as one of two or three new conditions that would bring momentous changes into his life. After a youth of hard work, pinched means and the narrowest path of duty he had come face to face with a future full of possibility.

He had had no communication with Paula since the day when his mother had joined their hands in an act of which neither knew the significance—if it had significance at all. She had written an affectionate note of sympathy to Marah and had left with her father for a few weeks in the Touraine. But Winship knew there was no coquetry in this withdrawal. It was only flight from a situation of which neither he nor she was sure.

Paula's thoughts were back in the long red studio, piecing together the events of the past winter and tracing the progress through which her mind had come to submit itself to Roger Winship.

"You seem to be in a dream, dear," her father had said to her once or twice, and the statement fitted her. She made no effort to confront her problems or to smooth her way. She was content for the moment to move in her dream—the dream in which love is still able to keep to its defenseless paradise.

With the return to town, the thought of the practical became more insistent. What was to happen? How was it to happen? The old life seemed to close in so tenaciously about her that she wondered how it would ever be possible to get out of it. Even her dream lost some of its reality in the stress of giving and receiving invitations to dinner. With all that she could not avoid doing, it was the third day after her return before she could find time to steal into the Salon and see the effect of her portrait as it hung. So much had been said of it at social gatherings and in the press that even her family were roused to some degree of interest. When they began planning a party to go and see it together Paula seized the first occasion to slip off alone. It was a wild, wet afternoon. There would be few visitors. She was fairly sure of having the gallery to herself.

It was as she expected. The great rooms of the Grand Palais, deserted except for the uniformed guardians and a solitary wanderer here and there, succeeded each other in long, empty vistas of color. Her own portrait held a conspicuous place of honor, and of the rare visitors two or three were generally stationed before it. She sat on a divan in the center of the room, but too far off to challenge comparison with the object of interest on the wall.

As she gazed about her she thought with compassion of the amount of ambition and toil that had gone to make up such a collection—toil that would never reap an adequate reward, ambition that would never have any fulfillment. The feeling of pity which rose now was new to her—new since she had watched Marah working away day after day at her little wooden miniatures, now especially since the question touched the man she loved.

He, too, had sent his offspring here for the last five years. She herself had passed them by and never noticed them. The dumb things had appealed to her for a glance, and she had ignored them. Hundreds of thousands had moved on in the same neglect and indifference. It seemed now like a wound to her own pride. True, he had done some of them as commissions, and some of them he had sold. But she knew that some, too, were still roaming from one exhibition to another in the hope of finding a purchaser. So much effort and little or no recompense! Her father or George would scoff at all that Winship could earn in a year. Even for this thing, which was counted a success, he had received but 8,000 francs and, for a man of his standing, was to be considered well paid. Eight thousand francs! She had often spent as much for a trinket. The very fact that women of fashion, women of her own world, were already coming to be painted by him scorched her with a sense of humiliation that he should be dependent on their patronage. That at least need never be, she reflected, with some exultation. She had no high flown theories of the beauty of art or of the nobility of toil. It was enough to know that the man she loved would be free from all sordid cares of that kind—when she married him.

She had reached this point in her meditations when a footstep startled her, and Winship himself glided on to the divan beside her.

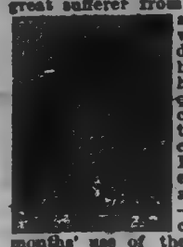
ANOTHER WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound



Gardiner, Maine.—"I have been a great sufferer from organic troubles and a severe female weakness. The doctor said I would have to go to the hospital for an operation, but I could not bear to think of it. I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash—and was entirely cured after three months' use of them."—Mrs. S. A. WILLIAMS, R. F. D. No. 14, Box 39, Gardiner, Me.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made exclusively from roots and herbs, a fair trial.

This famous medicine for women has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and renewer of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cures female ills, and creates radiant, buoyant female health. If you are ill, for your own sake as well as those you love, give it a trial.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Horse Distemper

Prince Edward Farmer Solemnly Declares "Nerviline" Is a Specific.

"After fifty years' experience in raising horses I can safely testify that no remedy gives such good results for an all-round stable liniment as Nerviline." Thus opens the very earnest letter of J. J. Evanston, who lives near Wellington, P. E. "I had a very valuable horse that took distemper a month ago, and was afraid I was going to lose him. His throat swelled and hard lumps developed. His nostrils ran and he had a terrible cough. I tried different remedies, but was unable to relieve my horse of his pain and suffering till I started to use Nerviline. I mixed a bottle of Nerviline and sweet oil and rubbed the mixture on the throat and chest three times a day and you would scarcely believe the way that horse picked up. Nerviline cured him. I also have used Nerviline for colic in horses and cows, and earnestly recommend it to every man that is raising stock."

Nerviline CURES QUICKLY

For strains, sprains, swellings, colic, distemper, coughs, and colds, no liniment will prove so efficacious in the stable as "Nerviline"—it's good for man or beast, for internal or external use. Wherever there is pain, Nerviline will cure it. Refuse substitutes. Large bottles 50c, trial size 25c, at all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

CORNS CURED IN 24 HOURS

You can painlessly remove any corn, either hard, soft, or bleeding, by applying Putnam's Corn Extractor. It never burns, leaves no scar, contains no acids; is harmless, because composed only of healing gums and balms. Fifty years in use. Cure guaranteed. Sold by all druggists, 25c bottles. IS READY TO START

City Will be Supplied Water From New Dam Within a Few Days

It may come as a surprise to Peterborough citizens to learn that the new waterworks dam is almost ready for operation. The Bishop Construction Company have wasted no time and at present all the machinery is installed and ready to be put in motion. Just now the connection is being made between the pumps and the large main that carries the water to the city, and if everything goes well the city will be getting its water from the new dam towards the end of next week. Before the dam and machinery are taken over by the city they will have to undergo a thorough test, which will take two or three months.

THEATRICAL

"THE CLIMAX"

"The little girl who lost her voice," such is the subscription of Adelina, the heroine in Joseph M. Weber's brilliant New York success, "The Climax," a stirring story of Bohemian life by Edward Locke, with incidental music by Joseph Carl Breil, which will be the attraction at the Grand next Thursday evening, April 7th.

The author is said to have given us something really new in theatrical conceptions. He has worked out his theme with humor and imagination, with a delicacy of poetic fancy, with truth to the demands of reasonableness in character and situations, and with dramatic picturesqueness and structural effectiveness. There will be no attraction seen here this season better worth seeing in the combination of qualities that make up for pure enjoyment. "The Climax" is made up of only four characters, and the entire action takes place at the Bohemian apartments of Luigi Golfanti, in New York. Adelina von Hagen comes to Luigi, a voice culturist, and lives with him and his son Pietro, a young musician of great promise. Adelina is beloved by John Raymond, a young doctor, who endeavors to persuade her to relinquish her love for art for his devotion, but she steadfastly refuses. A slight operation upon her vocal chords is found necessary and to further his own ends and to obtain his heart's desire, the doctor, by mental suggestion, wills that she shall be unable to sing upon her recovery from the ordeal. Pietro also loves Adelina, and he has written and composed "The Song of a Soul" inspired by Adelina, but when she tries to sing this song her voice fails her completely. This tragic scene of the play is one that makes the heart swell up and seek relief in tears believing that she can no longer become a great singer, she agrees to wed the doctor, and in the pleasant excitement preceding her marriage she discovers that she has regained her voice, "and all is well that ends well." The development of the plot introduces both instrumental and vocal music in which "The Song of a Soul" is one of the important features. "The Climax" is one of those beautiful creations that utterly defies criticism, and is such a pretty play, so prettily told, that a synopsis of its plot but seems to mar it, as one must see it to appreciate it.

The presenting company, which includes Arthur Coglisier, Chester Barnett, Thomas Sinclaire and Miss Ann Swinburne, is said to be one of exceptional merit, each member fitted with a part admirably suited to his or her respective personalities or talents.

PARTELLO STOCK CO.

The Partello Stock Company, an organization of merit, begins a week's engagement, excepting Thursday, commencing next Monday night, Apr. 4th, with Wednesday and Saturday matinee, at the Grand Opera House, in the inspiring comedy drama "The College Girl," a play dealing with life at one of the large co-educational institutions of the east.

Those Canadian favorites, Alice Kennedy, and Jack Westerman, top the list of the cleverest array of entertainers ever seen together.

Every play produced will receive a complete stage dressing and brilliant electrical effects. The company is a favorite one here to theatregoers, and has established a reputation throughout other cities in Ontario which it will endeavor to sustain in Peterborough.

"A Royal Prisoner," "The Girl of Eagle Ranch," "Lena Rivers," "A Human Slave" and "A Fool and His Fortune" are some of the plays to be presented during the week. In addition there will be sky-high vaudeville.

Ladies will be admitted for 15 cents to best reserved seats Monday night, April 4th, under usual conditions; limited to 200. Seat sale now open.

TORONTO OPPOSES RAILWAY WHICH WILL ENTER PETERBOROUGH

Ottawa, March 31.—Mr. Fowke appeared before the Railway Committee of the House of Commons to-day in support of the bill to incorporate the Toronto Eastern Railway Company, which proposes to construct a line from Toronto to Cobourg, thence to Peterborough, from Oshawa to Lindsay, from a point in the township of Scarboro to Uxbridge, and from Oshawa to a point on the waterfront of Lake Ontario. Mr. Fowke explained that 6,00,000 people were interested in the construction of the proposed road, and he presented a number of petitions in its favor.

The idea of the promoters was to establish a coal ferry from Charlotte to Port Oshawa, similar to that from Charlotte to Cobourg.

Mr. Code, on behalf of the Government of Ontario, objected to the bill, on the ground that the proposed road was of a local character, and came within the jurisdiction of the Province. Mayor Geary, speaking for the city of Toronto, supported Mr. Code's contention that the promoters should have gone to the Province. He did not know that whether the committee's decision against the city of Toronto in the Hamilton bill was to be taken as final.

Hon. Mr. Graham did not think Mayor Geary was fair in making that statement. The city of Toronto had in reality got everything it asked for. Mayor Geary did not agree with the Minister of Railways. So far as the present bill was concerned, he protested against it in toto.

Mr. Lancaster and Col. Sam Hughes did not see why a company should have to go to the Province of Ontario for a railway charter, in view of Sir James Whitney's legislation prohibiting Sunday cars.

LECTURE ON METEORITES BEFORE ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY

The regular meeting of the local centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada will be held next Tuesday night at the Collegiate Institute. Mr. H. B. Collier, Phm. B., will lecture on meteorites, explaining their origin and relation to comets. Mr. Collier has been making a study of meteorites for some years, and in connection with his studies has visited New York city and Toronto. While in New York he secured a number of fine studies, and these, with others, will be shown during the lecture. The famous Victoria meteorite, loaned by Chancellor Borwash, of Toronto University, will be on exhibition. This meteorite was first secured from the Indians in the Northwest, where it had been held for hundreds of years. Its weight is 324 pounds, and it is composed of 90 per cent. iron, 8 per cent. Nickle and the remainder in other minerals.

A cordial invitation is extended to the public to be present at the lecture. No admission fee will be charged.

DESCENDANT OF CAPTIVE JEWS IS PREMIER OF ITALY

The following has been handed to the Review by Mr. B. Luster:

For the first time in exile since Joseph, the son of Jacob, was premier of Egypt a Jewish man, holding his religion, is Prime Minister of a country. At the present time Leighi Luzat, a Jew, is the Premier of Italy. There are to-day, however, many Jewish Cabinet Ministers and men of high rank in many countries of the globe, especially in England, where there are three Ministers in the Cabinet at the present time, and although there were some prime ministers Jews, they were converted to Christianity before they were elected to office. The Premier of Italy is the first man, clinging to the Jewish religion, to be elected Premier of a leading civilized country.

It is most gratifying that this should happen in a city like Rome, where the Pope has his seat, and that a city where the first prosecutions were started against the Jews should have at the same time a Jewish mayor. And in the place when a great conqueror of his time Emperor Titus came back with Jewish prisoners chained to the carriage of triumph in which he was riding to show the rejoicing people of Rome that at last he had crushed Judea. History tells us that when he was riding through the gate of triumph that was prepared for him there were banners reading:—"Judea is Conquered and Lost Forever."—A number of the prisoners taken were thrown to the depths to be crushed to death. Many coins were distributed among the public bearing the words; "Judea is Lost Forever as a Nation." Eighteen hundred and forty years after the triumphial march in Rome of that great emperor you cannot find one real Roman, while the descendants of the chained captives are to-day ruling Rome.

Luigi Luzat is a descendant of one leading Jewish families of Italy, who for generations have been among the most learned men of their times and recognized authorities in theology and philosophy.

The present Premier was born in Venice in 1841. He studied law in Padua and Venice. In 1867 he graduated in Padua as Professor of Political Economy. In 1869 he became Minister of Agriculture. He has been continuously in the Italian Parliament for the last 40 years. In 1891 he was made Finance Minister and held that office for eighteen months when he resigned with the Cabinet. Then in 1896 he became Finance Minister for the second time and for the third time in 1904. In the last Cabinet he was Minister of Agriculture. He wrote several books on political and economical questions.

A TIMELY CAMPAIGN OF WIDESPREAD IMPORTANCE

The Y.M.C.A. have arranged for an educational campaign, under the leadership of Rev. J. Aspinall C. McCuaig, United States Vice-President and Canadian President of the National Christian League for the Promotion of Purity.

In the United States no movement of social reform has been accorded such general and spontaneous welcome as this, which has also commended itself that civic authorities, medical associations and other federations vie with churches and universities in enthusiastic response and hearty cooperation.

Because of the exceeding delicacy of the subject of social evil, the press, the pupil, the school and the home have been almost silent about it; but now a great effort is being made to place before the people the importance of action and proper knowledge, which is the essential need. Fundamentaly the crusade is on behalf of the child, who is received as the seed force of reform, by spreading knowledge among adults and parents which shall in turn be placed before younger persons.

On Sunday, April 10th, Mr. McCuaig will deliver morning and evening addresses in churches, to be announced later, and in the afternoon a mass meeting for men will be held in the opera house. During the same week a series of addresses and lectures will be given, of which further notice will follow.

NAVIGATION AGAIN OPEN

Monarch and Rainbow Came Up from Rice Lake This Morning -Ice all Gone

Boats have started running on the Otonabee river. The Monarch and Rainbow came up from Rice Lake this morning, both having a good quota of passengers. Although the water is rather high they made good time against the current. They docked at the street railway wharf as the Peterborough lock is not yet in operation. The Monarch called at Harwood, Gore's landing and river points, and the Rainbow started from Birdall's and touched the lake points.

This makes an exceedingly early opening of navigation. Last year the boats did not come to Peterborough till after the middle of April.

The Otonabee River and Rice Lake are entirely free from ice.

TORONTO MASONS VISIT LOCAL LODGE

A Large Gathering of the Craft at the Masonic Hall Last Evening

The regular communication of Peterborough Lodge, A.F. & a.m., last evening was given added interest by the presence of a delegation of visitors from Alpha Lodge, No. 381, of Toronto. The visitors reached the city by the evening C.P.R. train, and came direct to the lodge room, where they were greeted heartily. The work on the First Degree was taken on by the visitors and proved an interesting exemplification of the ceremony. The following officers of Alpha Lodge filled the chairs:—

W. Bro. Raymond Walker, Jr. W.M.
Rt. W. Bro. Geo. Tait ..... I.P.M.
W. Bro. R. R. Ledger ..... S.W.
Bro. R. H. McKerihen ..... J.W.
W. Bro. R. E. Porter ..... Chap.
V. W. Bro. E. J. Voss ..... Secy.
W. Bro. O. L. Jackson ..... Treas.
Bro. Geo. Gander ..... S.D.
Bro. Dr. Ashton Fletcher J.D.
Bro. H. Greet ..... I.G.
Bro. W. Hagan ..... S.S.
Bro. W. Scholes ..... J.S.
Bro. Dr. Stewart ..... Asst. J.S.

Alpha Lodge is one of the largest and most important of the city lodges, with a membership of over four hundred.

At the conclusion of the work supper was served in the refreshment hall, and the brethren from Toronto put on a programme of songs and entertainment. This was well worth the price of admission. They included a plenty of talent and the whole was most entertaining. Between songs and music addresses were given by prominent members of both lodges.

A pleasing feature of the evening was the presentation to Peterborough Lodge, by the Toronto visitors, of a very handsome and valuable Past-Master's Chain, of solid silver, beautifully made and having the working tools of the office pendant. The gift was wholly unexpected by the Peterborough brethren, and was most gracefully received and acknowledged.

Rt. W. Bro. Dr. S. P. Ford, of Norwood, D.D.G.M. of Otonabee District, No. 20, was present, and spoke briefly, referring to the Lodge of Instruction to be held here this month.

Bro. Mantell, who occupies the unique position of being 101 years of age, was present and received much attention deservedly given to one so aged and to his interesting personality. He gave a brief and humorous address, which was much enjoyed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE QUESTION WAS SUBJECT OF DEBATE

"Should Women Have Votes," was the topic of a most ably presented debate at the T.A.S. rooms last night, under the auspices of the Ladies' Literary Society. The affirmative was taken by Misses Grady and the negative by Misses Coughlin and Picard. Father Casey, Father Meagher and Miss Deanneard were the judges.

Both sides handled the subject with unusual skill, and some extremely well thought out and timely arguments were brought to bear. After careful deliberation the judges decided in favor of the negative.

A hearty vote of thanks for the active and useful part she had taken in the work of the society was given to Miss Deanneard, who is leaving for Belleville shortly. She has been a very energetic and effective worker.

A good programme and an interesting dramatic dialogue were given in connection with the debate.

At the next and final meeting for the year on Friday week, Rev. Father Casey will speak on "Ireland and Her Ideals." Father Casey is an eloquent and authoritive speaker, and his chosen subject of unusual interest.

HORSE WAS STOPPED AND DRIVER ASSAULTED

The names of four young men, who it is alleged, were implicated in a case of assault, which took place on the Gravel road last Sunday night, have been given to Magistrate Edmison, by High County Constable Cochrane, who has been making an investigation since the affair, and next week the particulars of the assault will be told at the county police court. The victim of the assault, a young man, was driving with two young ladies when suddenly the horse was stopped and the young man requested to get out of the buggy. He was then assaulted.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

AN UNFINISHED STORY.

Spoiled Because the Man Who Told It Had a Poor Memory.

Mr. Sniffin was at a dinner party given a few days ago at Judge Pitman's. While the company were at the table Sniffin said in a loud voice:

"By the way, did you read that good thing of Adaler's the other day about the woman over in Pencader? It was one of the most amusing things that ever came under my observation. The woman's name, you see, was Emma. Well, sir, there were two fellows paying attention to her, and after she'd accepted one of them the other also proposed to her, and as she felt certain that the first one wasn't in earnest she accepted the second one too. So a few days later both of 'em called at the same time, both claimed her hand, and both insisted on marrying her at once. Then of course she found herself face to face with a decidedly unpleasant—unpleasant—er—er—less see what's the word I want? Unpleasant—er—er— Blamed if I haven't forgotten that word."

"Predicament," suggested Judge Pitman.

"No, that's not it. What's the name of that thing with two horns? Unpleasant—er—er—hang it! It's gone clear out of my mind."

"A cow," hinted Miss Gridley.

"No, not a cow."

"Maybe it's a buffalo," remarked Dr. Potts.

"No, no kind of an animal. Something else with two horns. Mighty queer I can't recall it."

"Perhaps it's a brass band," observed Butterwick.

"Or a man who's had a couple of drinks," suggested Peter Lamb.

"Of course not."

"You don't mean a fire company?" asked Mrs. Pitman.

"Hum. What's the darndest, queerest thing I ever heard of that I can't remember that word," said Mr. Sniffin, getting warm and beginning to feel nettled.

"Well, give us the rest of the story without it," said Miss Gridley.

"What's the use telling it," said Mr. Sniffin, "why should John waste an exertion [illegible]."

"Two horns, did you say?" asked Dr. Potts. "[illegible] bass cornet."

"Or a [illegible] judge.

"[illegible]

"[illegible] or a painter" asked [illegible].

"I give it up. I'll have to give it up," said Mr. Sniffin, wiping the perspiration from his brow.

"Well, that's the oddest old story I ever [illegible]," remarked Butterwick to the judge. Then everybody smiled, and Mr. Sniffin scowled [illegible] upon the present that he had to meet a man, and he withdrew.

The mystery is yet unsolved. I never remembered any such story as that, and I have a faint impression that Sniffin was trying to build one up by bringing that woman's name, Emma, somehow into a pun with the word "[illegible]," and I am glad to [illegible]. When a man begins to mutter all his intellectual [illegible] and the time comes when he can't do without being [illegible]

The "Big Five" ball in the opera house here on Monday evening last was a great success, and the committee in charge are deserving of great praise for their work. The attendance was large, there being many out of town guests. Halpany's orchestra, of Peterborough, provided music for the occasion, while Mr. G. R. McGregor, of town was the caterer, supper being served at midnight. The evening was greatly enjoyed by all.

The following address and presentation was tendered Miss Day by her class before her departure from the school staff here for Norwood, where she has obtained an excellent position:—

Dear Teacher,—We, the pupils of your class, knowing that you are leaving us at Easter, regret to think of your ceasing to be our teacher. You have always taken a deep interest in our education, and have been willing at all times to assist us in our work. We cannot but part from us without some tangible evidence of our esteem for you, and appreciation of your work. Kindly accept this jewel case as a slight token from your last class in Havelock Public school.

We unite in wishing you all success in your future work.

Upper Lake Business Resumes.

Chicago, April 2.—Because of the favorable conditions at the upper end of Lake Michigan navigation will begin at once. Present ice conditions at Sault Ste. Marie are unequalled, it is said, in the records of many years. From Whitefish Bay to Detour practically no ice remains and marine men believe St. Mary's River already will permit of the passage of the biggest freighter on the lakes.

Baltimore, Md., April 2.—About 45,000 unorganized coal miners in Maryland, Northern West Virginia and South Pennsylvania have received an advance in wages of five per cent., according to an announcement made here yesterday.

They had made no demand.

How a Woman Can Build Up Her Health

This Open Letter From Mrs. L. Hermann Will Be Interesting to All Women Readers.

The following letter written from her prettily situated home in Ossining, on the banks of the Hudson, gives Mrs. Hermann's experience with ill-health:

"I was never very strong.

"Thousands there are just like me, who have to pay double toll for every little extra effort or exertion. When the weather was fine, and I was able to get about, I enjoyed life and held my strength. But something always happened—a little too much doing or some small sickness would put me back, and I would drop into the most miserable despondent state, unable to sleep or enjoy my meals. I decided to take the most nourishing and strengthening tonic made, and was strongly urged to use 'Ferrozone.' After the first box I saw Ferrozone was doing me good, so I followed closely the 'Ferrozone Rules for Health,' and gained steadily. At first I didn't eat as well as I once did—I couldn't expect to. But there was a gradual improvement in my appetite, and this buoyed up my hopes, and convinced me Ferrozone was what I needed. It is less than a year since I commenced Ferrozone and already I am like a new woman. I eat more, sleep better, weigh more, am stronger, healthier, better looking than ever before."

The tunic that is straight across the front is in general favor just now. It is not unlike last year's washerwoman skirt in style, and is indistinctly related to the long and overused Mayerniggle style.

The long-gathered, or gauffed sleeve, completed by a three or four-inch close-fitting cuff, almost identical with that which had such vogue several years ago, is now being inserted in the newest shirt-waists.

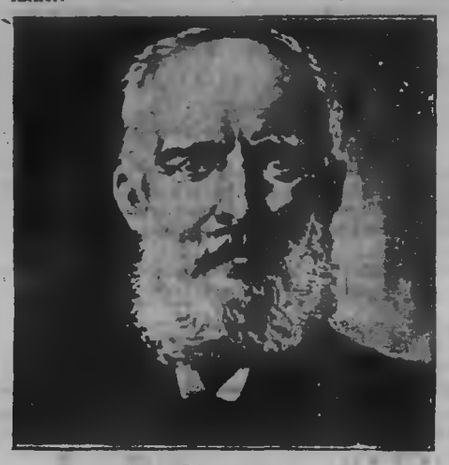
A TERRIBLE SUFFERER for THIRTY-FIVE YEARS

Treasurer of Caledonia Township says

"If it were not for "FRUIT-A-TIVES", I am satisfied I could not live."

Practically everybody in Prescott County, Ontario, knows of Mr. James Proudfoot. He was born over 70 years ago on the farm where he lives to-day. He is one of the most prominent farmers and stock raisers in this section of the country, and has been Treasurer of Caledonia Township for years, succeeding his father.

FENAGHVALE, ONT., JAN. 29TH., 1910



JAMES PROUDFOOT, Esq.

"For thirty five years, and I am now a man over seventy, I have been a terrible sufferer from Constipation.

No matter what remedy or physicians I employed, the result was always the same—impossible to get a cure. About 2 years ago I read the testimonial of Hon. John Costigan regarding "Fruit-a-tives" and I decided to give them a trial. I have used "Fruit-a-tives" ever since. They are the first and only medicine that suited my case. If it were not for "Fruit-a-tives", I am satisfied that I could not live."

JAMES PROUDFOOT.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest remedy ever discovered for all forms of Dyspepsia and Indigestion, because "Fruit-a-tives" keeps the blood pure and rich. You may ask, what is the connection between Stomach Trouble and Impure Blood? Because impure blood means an impure disolving fluid in the stomach which cannot digest the food. Digestion depends on the purity and composition of the disolving fluid. If the liver is congested—bowels constipated—kidneys weak—then the blood will be loaded with impurities. These impurities will taint the disolving fluid, which is supplied to the stomach by the blood.

"Fruit-a-tives" cures Indigestion and Dyspepsia because "Fruit-a-tives" makes the liver active, cures Constipation, strengthens and invigorates the kidneys, purifies the blood and keeps the stomach sweet and clean.

50c a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

INNOCENT IMMIGRANT GIRLS ENTICED TO RUIN

Canadian Traps to Catch Poor Young Creatures to Satisfy Lust of Beastly Men

The Review has already published one letter from Rev. Dr. J. J. Shearer regarding the White Slave Traffic. Following is a second article by Dr. Shearer, which we publish at the request of the Moral and Social Reform Council of Canada:—

The Dominion Police are responsible under the Treaty for the Suppression of the White Slave Trade for giving effect to the treaty so far as Canada is concerned. Colonel Sherwood, the Commissioner in command, is thoroughly capable and equally anxious to do his duty. In a letter to the writer, under date November 9th, he says:—

"In reply to your letter of yesterday I may say that the parties of whom I spoke were engaged in the White Slave Traffic with headquarters at Belgium, were Armand Lechien, and a woman, Alsie Lechien, who masquerades as his wife, otherwise known as Alzir Hennart, born in France, but of late years living at Liege, Belgium. They would appear to have been engaged in debauching and bringing young girls to this continent for some years back. It is known that in 1903 they brought some into the Yukon, one of the girls at that time being under 15 years of age.

"The particular case with which we had to do was the importation of Philomena Jongen, who was brought out by way of St. John, N.B., in 1908, and taken to a family near Stettler, Alta., to await a convenient opportunity to take her across the line. This was done later on in that year when she was taken to a ranch in Montana, kept by one Jules May (Mallie) and later taken to Denver, where she came under the notice of the officers of the Immigration and Naturalization Bureau, who apprehended her and got her story, resulting in the arrest of May (Mallie), who for this participation in the matter was in July last convicted and sentenced to four years in the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, and in addition to pay a fine of one thousand dollars ($1,000), and indictment was also found against Mrs. Lechien, but both she and her male companion have so far evaded arrest, but the officials, both of the United States and Canada, have been warned to be on the look-out and have been furnished with descriptions, and in the event of arrest they will be rigorously prosecuted.

REPORT OF IMMIGRATION.

The Immigration Chaplains at Atlantic ports see many instances of foreign girls which they have reason to believe are victims of this damnable traffic, but it is extremely difficult to detect or prove this to be the case. White Slave agents are closely watched wherever suspicion is aroused, and no such get access to the wharves. But who can guard unchaperoned girls after they leave the wharves and start on their overland journey? The Chaplains report that many such never reach their destination as declared to the immigration officials. What happens to them? How easy for a slave agent of either sex who can talk the victim's native tongue, to win her confidence, a lonely stranger in a strange land, and persuade her to change her plans and go with the agent to what is represented to be an inviting situation among her own country folk?

Letters from anxiously inquiring parents in the old lands about daughters from whom they have not heard, tell their own tale, confirming the suspicions of the chaplains. Who can even imagine the horrible tragedies hidden, shall we say mercifully, by this mantle of mystery? Verily the "Black Slave Trade" of other days was humane by comparison with this inconceivably heartless traffic of the 20th century, with unintended satire denominated "white."

Other articles by Rev. Dr. Shearer on this awful traffic will be published by The Review. The next article will show that all the victims are not marketed in the United States. Rev. Dr. Shearer will tell about the Canadian market for young girls.

CURE THAT COLD

This is Quickly and Pleasantly Accomplished If You Use

Catarrhozone

Catarrhozone will relieve colds almost instantly and in a few hours will cure completely. If it is old-standing asthma or bronchitis its quick and curative results will astonish you.

Catarrhozone is little drops of healing medicine carried by air to the sore and diseased parts. You breathe them through the Catarrhozone Inhaler and they spread throughout all the air passages.

It is sense as well as healing, because Catarrhozone is a germ killer, a healer and restorer of weak tissues, because it is so prompt and certain in its results, better than any other remedy for diseases of the throat, lungs and bronchial tubes, and it is neither alcohol, morphia or cocaine—all dangerous.

Tens of thousands have used Catarrhozone without reporting a single case of failure to cure diseases of the throat and lungs and nasal passages.

Price 25c., 50c., and $1.00 at all druggists or by mail, post paid, from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

WILL ADDRESS CANADIAN CLUB

George H. Locke, M.A., to Speak on "Books and Borrowers"

The final meeting for the season of the Peterborough Canadian Club will be held at the National Hotel on Thursday evening, April 7th, at 7.30 o'clock. The speaker of the evening will be Mr. George H. Locke, M.A., of Toronto, and his subject will be "Books and Borrowers." Arrangements are being made for a good musical programme, and it is expected the meeting will be one of the best of the series.

Mr. Locke is librarian of the Toronto Public Library.

The peplum, which, after all, is nothing but a variation of the loose tunic worn in the days of Rome's supremacy, is coming to the fore this spring. Pattern dresses of silk and fancy woven woolen fabrics are to be had with a peplum, or drapery, having a design which differentiates it from the material of the skirt.

SOUR RISINGS FROM STOMACH

Those Who Experience Fullness and Pain After Meals, Stomach Disorders, and Indigestion, Should Read Below.

"When I was working around the farm last winter I had an attack of inflammation," writes Mr. E. P. Dawkins, of Port Richmond. "I was weak for a long time, but well enough to work until spring. But something went wrong with my bowels, for I had to use salts or physic all the time. My stomach kept sour, and always after eating there was pain and fulness, and all the symptoms of intestinal indigestion. Nothing helped me until I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Instead of hurting, like other pills, they acted very mildly, and seemed to heal the bowels. I did not require large doses to get results with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and feel so glad that I have found a mild yet certain remedy. Today I am well—no pain, no sour stomach, a good appetite, able to digest anything. This is a whole lot of good for one medicine to do, and I can say Dr. Hamilton's Pills are the best pills, and my letter, I am sure, proves it."

PROTECTION WALL ALONG THE CREEK

The Board of Works have decided to build a protection wall along the creek between Bethune and Stewart streets. This has been always regarded as a dangerous spot and a little boy was drowned there last year. The necessity of the wall was discussed at the meeting of the Board last night and on motion of Ald. Phelan and Ald. Hicks, it was decided to build it.

That Surplus Power

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—The amount of blocking that has been heading off the negotiations between the city and the C.G.E., now that the whole affair has come to light, is shocking to a great many people. While the Time offer is a little better for the city's end of it than the second, either of them is good enough. The Water Commissioners need to be told where they get off at, and must not be allowed to block this great undertaking any farther. The city needs industries, and now is the time to get them, not to stop them. I am in favor of a public meeting being held and let the citizens get right to work to secure these large additions to the C.G.E.

Yours, etc.,

BOARD OF WORKS AWARD STREET WATERING CONTRACT

Tenders Are Higher Than Last Year and Total Cost Will be About $125 Higher Than in 1909—Engineer Reports on Proposed Sewage System for South End—Water Fountain for Hunter Street East.

An important meeting of the Board of Works was held last night, at which the tenders for street watering were let, the proposed sewage system in the south-western part of the city, discussed, and several other matters disposed of.

Those present were: Ald. Hicks, chairman; Mayor Morrow, Ald. McIlwraith, Graham, Phelan, Duffus and Duncan.

A report was read from the city engineer regarding which sewers in the southern part of the city reported on by Mr. Chipman should be built first. The engineer reported in part as follows:—"The system designed by Mr. Chipman requires as a starting point the construction of a pumping plant at the intersection of George street and the G.T.R. Belleville line, at which point all sewers to be built in the area west, north and south will be collected and pumped into the trunk sewer along Romaine street. Until this pumping plant is installed the sewers in this area cannot be commenced.

The portion of Romaine street sewer between Lock and George streets, which will form the outlet, will require to be relaid with a larger pipe and at a new grade. This portion, 540 feet, can be started at once. The estimated cost is $675.

With regard to the adoption of Mr. Chipman's plan, after the pumping station is installed and outlet enlarged, the sections of sewer most required at once are George street (pumphouse to Westcott), Westcott street (George to Park), Parnell street (Park street to C.P.R.), Romaine street (George to Aylmer), Aylmer street (King Edward school connection.) The estimated cost, including pumping station, and less material reclaimed in construction of Romaine street sewer, is $10,995.80.

J. C. Shook was heard in regard to sewerage for the district east of Harvey street and north of London street.

It was decided, on motion of Ald. Phelan and Graham, that the chairman be authorized to have an estimate made of the cost of the proposed sewer pumping station on Rubidge street, the relaying of the (Romaine street sewer, and the required surface drainage, and also of the proposed septic tank in the vicinity of London and Harvey streets, and for this purpose to consult Mr. Chipman.

A letter was read from the Peterborough Horticultural Society asking for street scrapings, and it was decided to grant the request as far as the street commissioner can morally do so.

STREET WATERING.

Tenders for the street watering for 1910 were received as follows:

SOUTHERN.

Samuel Harper	$525 00
Geo. McClellan	469 00
W. D. Dixon	449 00

WESTERN.

Geo. McClennan	$425 00
Alfred Blodgett	474 00
Jas. McWilliams	449 00

NORTHERN.

Jas. Blodgett	$458 99

EASTERN.

Albert Valois	$425 00

On motion of Ald. Duncan and Ald. Duffus, the tenders of W. D. Dixon, Jas. McWilliams, Justice Blodgett and Albert Valois were accepted.

The following figures will show that the street watering is going to cost more this year than last:

District.	1910.	1909.	Increase.
Southern	$449 00	$425 00	$ 24 00
Western	$449 00	$398 00	$ 51 00
Northern	$458 99	$449 50	$ 9 49
Eastern	$425 00	$419 00	$ 44 00
Total increase over 1909			$128 49

FOUNTAIN AT LAST.

The engineer reported that the fountain on Hunter street east could be changed to a continuously flowing one for $23, and on motion of Ald. Duncan and Ald. Duffus it was decided to have the change made.

On motion of Ald. Phelan and Ald. Duffus, the chairman was instructed to inquire into the cost of the Board of Works' team at the fire hall.

PRICE WITHDRAWN.

The Peterborough Hardware Company withdrew their price on cement for the city supply, and stated that when the city was in the market the company would be leased to quote a price. The price quoted was $1.65 per barrel.

It was decided to put in a catch basin on Aylmer street, near the fire hall.

The street commissioner was given authority to arrange for procuring gravel, to be paid for on certificate of city engineer.

The matter of procuring a horse and cart for street repairing was left with the chairman with power to act.

On the recommendation of the city engineer, improvements will be made to several streets. Notice will also be given of the intention of the Council to construct sewers as local improvements on a number of streets.

Ald. Gillespie was present for the last part of the meeting.

WITNESSES CLAIM THERE WAS PERCENTAGE ARRANGEMENT

Ottawa, April 1.—The charges made in the House by Haughton Lennox against L. P. Clarry, barrister, of Hastings, alleging a rake-off in connection with the settlement of certain claims for damages by flooding from works of the Trent Canal system, came before the Public Accounts Committee to-day.

Mr. Lennox said the gravamin of the charge was that Clarry, while acting for the government in respect to the damage claims, also received pay from the claimants. A blank retainer was produced whereby one of the claimants agreed to pay Clarry twenty per cent. of any amount received for damages.

Mr. Clarry admitted that such a retainer had been sent out to one Graham, but he thought it was before he had been engaged by the government. He said that Andrew Graham, a client of his, told him that his brother Stewart had a claim for flooded lands and asked him if he would act on the latter's behalf. He agreed to pay twenty per cent. He (Clarry) then drew up the retainer and Wm. Dickson, the government valuator, happening along, he sent it by him to Andrew Graham. Dickson did not know its contents.

George Fowlds, one of the claimants for drowned lands, said he gave Clarry a retainer for 20 per cent. of what he received. His claim was for $150, and he was charged $30 by Clarry.

James A. Warner, Asphodel, also said he agreed to pay 20 per cent. He recovered $3.90, and paid Clarry $66. He thought the charge was high, but made no protest. He went to Clarry because the latter wrote him that he wanted to see him on business. G. A. L. Humphries paid 20 per cent., and John Sargent 15 per cent.

Mr. Sargent said that before putting his claim in the hands of Clarry J. R. Stratton, M.P., advised him not to pay Clarry a commission, but Clarry being witness' solicitor he decided to give him a retainer of 15 per cent. It cost him $900.

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE SPRING

Do Not Dose With Purgatives—A Tonic is All You Need

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That's the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite fickle, sometimes headaches and a feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism or neuralgia. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order; that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you, and may easily develop into more serious trouble. Don't dose yourself with purgatives as many people do, in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need in the spring is a tonic that will make new blood and build up the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine helps make new blood, which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite, and makes tired, depressed men and women bright, active and strong. Mrs. Mary Baker, Tancook, N.S., says: "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been a great blessing to me. Last year while I was attending school I became so weak and completely run down that I thought I would have to give up going to school. I was affected with dizzy spells and would fall down at any time. I got half a dozen boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and before they were half gone I felt my strength returning. By the time I had used them all, the dizzy spells were completely gone and I was again enjoying good health."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THEY HAVE NOTHING TO MAKE PUBLIC

The Water Commissioners held a meeting last night to discuss the question of the C.G.E., and the surplus power at the new dam, but nothing was given out for publication—an indication that no decision was arrived at. It is not likely that the Commissioners will be prepared to go into the matter at the meeting of the council on Monday night.

TO COMPEL COMPANY TO REMOVE POLES

At the meeting of the Peterborough Board of Works last night, the city solicitor was instructed to apply to the Board of Railway Commissioners, if deemed advisable, to compel the G. N.W. Telegraph Company to remove their poles on George street between McDonnel and Wolfe streets, and to ascertain what steps should be taken in connection with street paving.

POSTERS ARE ATTRACTIVE

The posters, which should be of great advertising value and will also be the means of bringing a very desirable publicity to Peterborough, the home of Fruitlets.

The posters are "eight-sheet" lithographs, and are made by the Howell Lithograph Co., of Hamilton.

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

ROOSEVELT NOT TO SEE THE POPE

The Colonel Cancels Appointment at Vatican—Makes a Statement.

Rome, April 4.—The audience which it was believed ex-President Roosevelt would have with the Pope on Tuesday next will not occur, owing to conditions which the Vatican has imposed, and which Mr. Roosevelt refuses to accept.

Although definite negotiations relative to the audience ended before Mr. Roosevelt left Egypt, the announcement was withheld until after Mr. Roosevelt reached Rome last night, at the solicitation of his American Catholic friends here, who believed that in the meantime the Vatican might change its attitude.

While at Gondokoro, in February last, Mr. Roosevelt wrote to Ambassador Leishman, saying that he would be glad of the honor of an audience with King Victor Emmanuel and the Pope. The audience with the King was promptly arranged. Before an arrangement could be reached relative to an audience with the Pope, several telegrams were passed, and the negotiations ended by Roosevelt refusing in any way to be limited as to conduct, and announcing that an audience with the Pope under the circumstances was now impossible.

A large crowd met Roosevelt at the station yesterday. A detachment of carbineers and a large force of police made a pathway from the train to the royal waiting-room, the King having ordered that the ex-President should be given the same honors as the members of royal families when they visit the Italian capital.

The streets to the hotel were lined with spectators, and Roosevelt and his family were cheered from time to time as they proceeded in carriages.

Roosevelt particularly desired that the incident shall be regarded by his friends, both Catholic and Protestant, in America as personal and that it shall not give rise to acriminous controversy. With this end in view, were cabled yesterday a statement to Rev. Lyman Abbott, editor of The Outlook, New York, which says, in part:

"Through The Outlook, I wish to make a statement to my fellow-Americans regarding what has occurred in connection with the Vatican. I am sure that the great majority of my fellow-citizens, Catholics quite as much as Protestants, will feel that I acted in the only way possible for an American to act, and because of this very fact I most earnestly hope that the incident will be treated in a matter of course way merely personal, and above all, as not warranting the slightest exhibition of rancor or bitterness.

"On my journey through Africa I visited many Catholic as well as many Protestant missions. As I look forward to telling the people at home all that has been done by Protestants and Catholics alike, as I saw it, in the field of missionary endeavor, it would cause me a real pang to have anything said or done that would hurt or give pain to my friends, whatever their religious belief."

It will be remembered that a few weeks ago former Vice-President Fairbanks had to forego his expected visit to the Vatican because he preferred to address a Methodist congregation, contrary to the papal wishes.

MRS. SAGE PLANS MODEL LOAN OFFICE

New York, April 4.—Mrs. Russell Sage is to devote some of the millions left by her husband to saving the poor and needy of this state from the usury of loan sharks. The Sage millions are to be used to capitalize a chain of model loan establishments, which will advance money on chattel mortgages at the legal rate of interest.

The Sage Foundation, co-operating with Orion H. Cheney, state superintendent of banks, has prepared the plan, and it only awaits the final approval of Mrs. Sage. She has just returned from a trip across the continent and is expected to settle the final details of the plan at once.

According to Mr. Cheney the new loan offices will not only be of inestimable benefit to the poor, but will drive the usurers and loan sharks out of business, or, at least, cripple them. He has been engaged for some time in waging war on these loan sharks, and is very thankful for the aid proffered by Mrs. Sage.

TRAGIC DEATH OF FRENCH AVIATOR

San Sebastien, Spain, April 4.—Another French aviator has met death while making a flight in an aeroplane. Hubert Leblon, who prior to his taking up aeroplaning, was a noted automobilist, was killed while making an exhibition flight here Friday. He was circling the royal palace of Miramar at a height of 140 feet, when his motor broke down. He attempted to glide back to the shed, but the machine turned over and swooped with terrific force against the rocks. The aviator was crushed like a shell.

Mme. Leblon witnessed the accident and when the body was recovered from the sea, she rushed shrieking toward the ambulance to which it was being carried, she threw herself upon the lifeless form, kissing it repeatedly, and refusing to be led away.

As the weather was stormy, Leblon's flight was unexpected, and only a few persons assembled to see the start.

CITIZENS GIVE THEIR VIEWS ON SURPLUS POWER QUESTION

Majority Are in Favor of City Accepting the Proposition of the C.G.E. Company.

Would be Bad Blow to City if Extensions Were Made at Toronto Instead of at Peterborough—Increase in Pay List Would be Great Benefit.

In view of the fact that there is a deep interest among citizens in the negotiations between the city and the Canadian General Electric Company, regarding the surplus power at the waterworks dam, the Review presents to its readers to-day the views of a number of leading citizens on this important matter. It will be seen that nearly all the interviews are favorable to the city accepting the proposition of the company, which is, in brief, that the company pay the city $2,000 per year for a period of twenty years for the surplus power at the dam, the company to build the power house, instal the machinery and operate same, and transmit the power. At the end of the twenty years the power house and machinery are to revert to the city without cost. If there is less than one thousand horse power the company want a reasonable reduction in the amount to be paid each year.

Following are the interviews:—

MR. J. H. CONNAL.

Mr. J. H. Connal, of the firm of P. Connal & Son, said, he had been told by many persons that there would not be a surplus of a thousand horse power at the new dam. In view of these statements he was hardly in a position to express an opinion regarding the offer of the company.

"Of course we want to get the additions to the C.G.E. plant," said Mr. Connal, "as the works here have been a big factor in the upbuilding of the city. A large increase in the pay list of the company would be of great benefit to the city."

MR. COLLIER'S VIEWS.

Mr. H. B. Collier, of the Collier Electric Company, was of the opinion that, if the C.G.E. would agree to build the extensions here and stipulate the amount of money they would spend in that connection, the city would be justified in entering into an agreement to give the company the surplus power at the new dam on the terms proposed by the company, namely, $2,000 per year, the company to build the power-house, install the machinery and operate it, the power house and plant to revert to the city at the end of twenty years.

MR. A. W. CREESMAN.

"I am strongly in favor of the city accepting the proposition made by the Canadian General Electric Company in connection with the surplus power at the new dam." This was the view expressed by Mr. Creesman to the Review.

"LEAVE IT TO THE COMMISSIONERS."

Mr. Robert Fair thought the Water Commissioners should not be interfered with. "They were elected by the people and sworn to do their duty," said Mr. Fair, "and the people should have confidence in their judgment and let them do what they think is best. The commissioners can gather public sentiment themselves, and I do not think it fair for anyone to interfere with their business. Let us leave this matter to the commissioners."

THAT LIGHTING CONTRACT.

City Treasurer Adams said he thought it would be to the city's interests to accept the proposition of the C.G.E. Co. Attention should be paid, however, to the fact that the contract between the city and the Peterborough Light and Power Company expires at the end of the next four years, and the city should not be in a position at that time where it could do nothing else than accept the terms of the company in connection with a new agreement.

PRESENT WORKS WILL REMAIN.

"Will the works of the Canadian General Electric Company now located in Peterborough be removed to Toronto if the Water Commissioners and the City Council refuse to accept the offer made by the company for the surplus power at the waterworks dam?" enquired a Review man of Mr. E. G. Patterson, superintendent of the Canadian General Electric Company's works in Peterborough.

"No," said Mr. Patterson. "We will neither threaten the city of Peterborough in order to get what we want, nor punish it if our proposals are rejected. We think our offer for the power is a fair one to the city, and it is the best we can make, but if the Water Commissioners and the City Council think they can make a better bargain for the city with some other company they must do what they think is best. However, we cannot wait while the Water Commissioners are seeking customers for the power. It is necessary for the expansion of our business that the new works shall be constructed immediately. The plans are ready, and every day of delay in beginning construction of the buildings means a loss of business and profits to the Canadian General Electric Company. We must have power for the new works, and if we cannot get it in Peterborough the extensions will be constructed in Toronto. Work must be begun at once on the new buildings."

"Do you mean, then, that Peterborough will retain the present works in any case, but that all extensions to the works will be made in Toronto,"

"Yes, but the business of the company is likely to expand so rapidly with the growth of the country that the works in Toronto would probably become of greater magnitude than those in Peterborough, and it is possible that at some future time it might be found advisible to concentrate everything in Toronto with a view to economy in management. The head office of the company is there now. On the other hand, if the present extensions are made in Peterborough so much capital will be invested here that it will probably pay the company to make future extensions in this city also."

MR. J. H. BURNHAM.

Mr. J. H. Burnham said: "Although I am interested in another electric power, I think it would be a shame for the city not to accept either one of the propositions of the C.G.E. in view of the fact that extensive additions are to be made to the buildings, plant, and the number of hands employed."

MR. J. J. TURNER, SR.

Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., was of the opinion that the matter should be looked at in a broad and generous light. He favored the proposition as it stands at present. A very important thing to bear in mind was that the city would be at no expense in connection with the development of the power. Mr. Turner thought the C.G.E. had done a great deal towards building up Peterborough and should be even granted what might now appear to some to be a concession, but what would, in his opinion, be a boon in the long run. "If the works were to withdraw it would be a hard blow to Peterborough," said Mr. Turner, "and it would take a long time and be a difficult matter to replace them by other industries. Besides that the fact of the city not being able to come to terms with such a large concern would be a damper on the ambition of other industries, considering the advisability of locating here."

MR. J. H. LARMONTH.

Mr. J. H. Larmonth, managing director of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, thought that the city should be satisfied to get merely the cost of development, in order to encourage the industry. The proposition was all right, he thought, provided the company will take chances that there is 1,000 h.p. They should pay $2,000, as they proposed—in case of there being 1,000 h.p. available. He didn't think the city should be bound down to make any allowances on the basis that there might possibly be less than the 1,000 h.p.

MR. JAMES LYNCH.

To Mr. James Lynch the proposal of the company appeared a feasible one and he was in favor of the contract being made the terms now under consideration.

MR. W. H. DENHAM.

Mr. W. H. Denham, manager of the Quaker Oats Co., said that he figured that if the proposal were carried through the city would be making about $6 a h.p. and doing nothing to develop the power. He thought that would be more profitable than if the city itself developed the power except in case all the power was contracted for before its development, which would be unlikely.

A GROCER'S VIEW.

Mr. Jas. R. Bell, grocer, expressed the opinion that Peterborough should be prepared to do a good deal to get the additions to the C.G.E. works built in this city. The advertising as well as the financial side should be considered. It would be a bad thing for this city from an advertising standpoint if Peterborough's largest industry should build its additions in another city whereas it would be a big boost for Peterborough if the company thought enough of Peterborough to build the additions here. For these reasons, Mr. Bell thought that everything within reason should be done to get the additions in Peterborough.

MR. RICHARD HALL.

Mr. Richard Hall, of R. Hall & Son, thought the water commissioners ought to have the ruling opinion in everything concerning the new dam. They had taken the leading part in the construction of the dam and were appointed by the city for special officers in connection with the administration of civic affairs.

MR. FOSTER NOT GOING TO RESIGN

Special to the Review.

Ottawa, April 4.—Hon. George E. Foster to-day denied, in the most emphatic terms, the story published in some papers that he had decided to retire from public life. "Not unless the Lord takes me," was Mr. Foster's comment. "Some one has been getting in his dirty work, and I was never even asked for verification of the story by the author of the fake matter."

THE REVIEW'S OPINION.

The offer of the Canadian General Electric Company for the surplus power at the waterworks dam is still under consideration by the Water Commissioners and the city council. The Water Commissioners as a body have not yet been heard from. Possibly they may make some new suggestion acceptable alike to the company and the city, but no time should be lost in coming to an agreement with the Canadian General Electric Company to secure the new works for Peterborough.

If the last proposal made by the company is accepted the citizens of Peterborough will not be called upon to spend one cent or to guarantee the interest on any expenditure on account of surplus power development at the waterworks dam. The company will undertake the work of development at its own cost and pay the city $2,000 per year if 1,000 horse power can be developed, and at the rate of two dollars per horse power if the amount of power that can be developed is less than 1,000 horse power. At the end of twenty years the company will hand over the power plant free of cost to the Water Commissioners. Thus the Water Commissioners will get their annual revenue without any expenditure of public money, and without any worry, bother or risk.

On the other hand, if the Water Commissioners decide to reject the offer of the company and develop the power for the purpose of selling it at a high price to no one knows whom it will be necessary to ask the property owners of the city to vote for a by-law authorizing the Water Commissioners to borrow $50,000 for the purpose of developing this power. It is possible that the property owners might vote against such a by-law. In that case the surplus power would go to waste and the Water Commissioners would get no revenue whatever from it.

If the property owners did vote money for development in case the power was not disposed of before development, it is possible that the Water Commissioners might not be able to sell the whole of it after development.

It is of the utmost importance that the new works of the Canadian General Electric Company shall come to Peterborough. They will immediately spend $250,000 on buildings and plant, and after the new works are in operation an immense amount of money will be paid out annually for wages.

About five hundred additional workmen will probably be employed, and many of these workingmen will have families, so that the population of Peterborough will be greatly increased.

The fact that the Canadian General Electric Company is building great additional works here will be an advertisement for Peterborough all over the continent of America. On the other hand, if the additional works should be located in Toronto instead of Peterborough it would be generally supposed that Peterborough is not a suitable place to locate a large industry and it would make it more difficult to induce other industries to come here.

We have no doubt that the City Council and the water commissioners will cooperate in the endeavor to secure these great works for Peterborough. There may be difference of opinion as to the best way of accomplishing this and The Review does not insist that any particular plan that has been proposed is necessarily the best plan, but some decided action must be taken quickly in order that the works may not be lost to the city.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

A strike that may involve 1,500,000 employes in the German building trades is foreshadowed for April 14.

A celebration of the new tariff agreement is planned in Boston, with Earl Grey, Mayor Guerin of Montreal and other Canadians assisting.

Employes of the Furness shipbuilding yards (England) have voted to give up the co-operation with employers idea, after one year's trial.

Mayor Magee of Pittsburg was hooted off the platform at a public meeting, after having been accused of providing counsel for an official charged with grafting.

Simultaneous raids on brokerage offices in New York, Philadelphia, Jersey City, Baltimore, Cincinnati, St. Louis, all alleged bucket shops, netted 28 prisoners, including five reputed millionaires.

J. M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem (Pa.) Steel Co., announces an increase in wages among hundreds of laborers, giving them an advance of one cent an hour, making the rate 13 1-2 cents an hour.

Prince Henry of Prussia will be a member of the advance expedition which will prepare the Spitsbergen base for Count Zeppelin's north pole flight of 1912. The party will sail in July from Bremerhaven.

BRITAIN MAY HAVE TWO MORE ELECTIONS IN NEAR FUTURE

People Are Getting Heartily Sick of the State of Affairs in the Old Land and General Apathy Exists—Candidates Tired and Are Dropping Out

London, April 4.—(New York Tribune Cable.)—The impending political crisis is approached with apathy by men of all parties. Even the astounding deficit of over £31,000,000 fails to make a deep impression, and the calculation that over £90,000,000 must be provided in the two budgets this year does not appear to frighten anybody.

It is not because the partisans are bent on fastening the responsibility for the financial disturbance on the other party, nor because the Radical pot is calling the Tory kettle black. It is because the result of the general election, when it comes, is expected to be indecisive and because a third appeal to the country is regarded as a foregone conclusion.

Well informed politicians of all parties assume that an election in May will be followed by another one in July or August, since the relations between the two main parties are not likely to be altered and the Nationalists will hold the balance of power and block the necessary financial legislation.

The prospects of having three elections in a single year, without a definite assurance of authority for levying an income tax tends to create a disgust for politics of every color, when the expenses are heavy and the result are uncertain. The candidates are tired and are disposed to abandon public life for the superior excitement of the rubber market or the Rhodesian boom. The warning that at election is close at hand, and every week candidates are falling out. Meanwhile, stock speculation is rampant and turfmen are forecasting heavy plunging on the horses as a consequence of the suspension of the income taxes.

One important change likely to be effected by the elections is in the relations of the Irish factions to each other and to the two main parties. Wm. O'Brien's action in founding the All-for-Ireland League points to a coalition with the Conservatives and the Protestants. Starting originally with opposition to the whisky and land taxes imposed with the budget, and with a denunciation of the ring man agement of the Nationalist party, he has already taken an advanced position in favor of reconciliation with the Unionist Lords and the Protestant minority.

An expansion of Mr. O'Brien's movement seems almost inevitable. It is not dependent on overseas contributions, but on subscriptions from the Conservative Lords and the good will of the Protestants in the districts which have been uncontested for many years. Land reform has revolutionized Ireland by the creation of a large body of small owners with a Conservative bias. Mr. O'Brien appeals to them, and endeavors to dispel the distrust of the Protestants by assuring them that their property rights and religious liberties will be same under home rule. He welcomes assistance from Lord Castletown, Lord Rossmore and Lord Dunraven, and denounces Messrs. Redmond, Dillon and O'Connor for setting up a system of Roman Catholic organism more detestable than Protestant Orangeism.

If Mr. O'Brien largely increases the number of his supporters in Parliament at the next election there may be a faction strong enough to keep the Unionist Ministry in power. The Nationalists, in that even, will be divided into two groups, one with Conservatives and the other with Liberal sympathies, and each intensely hostile to the other.

The strangest anomaly in all this topsy-turvydom is that the less tolerant and more embittered Roman Catholic faction is in alliance with British Liberalism and Nonconformity, and at the same time is holding up the budget and exercising a dictatorship over a ministry committed to Gladstonian home rule.

Meanwhile, the Government has introduced the mechanism for carrying the first veto resolution this coming week and the remaining two by the end of a fortnight, and for forcing the budget by rapid stages into committee, where it will be hung up until John Redmond makes up his mind whether to let it pass or not. The Lords will employ the interval in discussing the definite reform proposals submitted by Lord Rosebery.

GERMAN BALLOONISTS MEET WITH A TRAGIC DISASTER

Architect, Banker, Member of Reichstag and a Fourth Man Make a Ascent, But Met With Accidents at the Start.

Cottin, Germany, April 4. The German balloon Pommern, which made an ascension here yesterday afternoon met with a series of accidents which ended in a disaster under most tragic circumstances in the Baltic Sea three men lost their lives, including the Radical member of the Reichstag, Herr Hugo Delbrueck. Herr Delbrueck and another member of the party were drowned, a third occupant of the car was picked up unconscious and died from his injuries, while the fourth was rescued in a serious condition.

The Pommern carrying Delbrueck who was acting as pilot, a banker, Herr Semmelhardt, an architect, Herr Benduhn, and a man named Hein, ascended yesterday afternoon at the gasworks. The wind was blowing a hurricane, and the Pommern broke away before she had been completely ballasted.

A chapter of accidents began immediately. The balloon collided with telegraph wires, which broke, almost overturning the basket. It then dashed into the roof of a neighboring factory, destroying the smokestack. With the basket swaying wildly, and half of its ropes cut, the balloon soared to a great altitude, and disappeared in the clouds at a terrific speed.

Thousands of onlookers, including a detachment of military, which had assisted in the ascent, ran along the roads, expecting the basket to break away. The balloon, however, was not seen again until it reached Swinemunde, 36 miles northwest of Stettin over which it passed, at a height of 6,000 feet, in the direction of the sea.

Tugs followed in its tracks and one of them had outdistanced the others, which was almost directly under it, when suddenly the balloon fell into the sea. The tug steamed to the spot quickly, but the work of rescue was difficult. Already Delbrueck and Benduhn had disappeared, but Semmelhardt and Hein were clinging to the ropes, and they were dragged aboard the vessel.

Describing their terrible experiences, Herr Semmelhardt when he had been somewhat revived, said: "Our collision with the telegraph lines and the factory roof had the most horrible consequences. Delbrueck sustained a broken leg and a severe injury to the head. Benduhn had an arm and leg fractured. Hein received bad contusions of the head. I was knocked senseless, but recovered in a moment to find that I had a crushed knee and chest.

"Delbrueck in spite of his awful condition, vainly endeavored to open the valve, which had become entangled. We knew not what to do, but merely awaited our fate.

"In the meantime, we passed over Swinemunde at a great altitude, and soon found ourselves above the sea. We thought possibly that we might land in Sweden, but the balloon was caught in a rain cloud which drove us down, until we were within 150 feet of the water.

"Delbrueck was suffering agony, but he succeeded in pulling the rip cord, and we fell into the water like a log. All managed to get clear of the basket, I with Hein swam and caught hold of the network, but Delbrueck and Benduhn sank. I remembered no more until I found myself in the boat which rescued us."

Hein died soon after being taken on the tug and Delbrueck's body was washed ashore last evening.

THEY WILL HAVE A GREAT TIME

New York, April 4.—In connection with the visit of the St. Patrick Chapter of Toronto to Ancient Chapter of this city, on the 15th inst., elaborate preparations have been made by the local Royal Arch Masons for the entertainment of over 1,000 visitors. Prominent capitation grand officers will take part in the proceedings, and representative of Canada in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York and Maryland will be present to welcome the Toronto Chapter.

Has Invented Imitation Rubber.

Berlin, April 4.—England's great rubber boom is destined to be seriously punctured by an important discovery just made by Prof. Karl Harries of the University of Kiel. This eminent German scientist has perfected a process for the artificial production of rubber which is undistinguishable from the natural article and equal to it in quality, durability and all other essential respects.

NO SETTLEMENT AT PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia, April 4.—All peace negotiations are again off in the street car strike. The latest effort of the politicians and representatives of the American Federation of Labor were without result, and the politicians declare that so far as they are concerned the strike will run its course.

The stumbling block appears to be the reinstatement of all the strikers, to be followed by adjustment of differences.

Three Men Treed by Wolves.

Ottawa, April 4.—A despatch from La Tugue, Que., tells of a thrilling experience three men, Wm. Midlige, Dr. M. Boudreau and H. P. Kinney, had with wolves. While walking in the woods near La Tugue they were pursued by the wolves and forced to spend a cold night in a tree. At daybreak the wolves slunk away. Dr. Boudreau had a toe frozen.

THE BRITISH PREFERENCE SACRIFICED

The numerous tariff reductions made by the Laurier Government on imports from all foreign countries at the dictation of President Taft of the United States, will greatly reduce the value of the preference to products of the British Empire. Many of the articles included in the omnibus clause of the Customs Act, while not produced in Canada can be imported advantageously from other countries of the British Empire. It is desirable that our tariff on such articles when imported from foreign countries should be high enough to give countries of the Empire a really substantial preference. The larger the list we have of such articles the less danger there will be of sacrificing Canadian industries in order to give a preference to British products.

If the Laurier Government keep on tinkering the tariff we shall soon have nothing whatever to offer British countries in return for a preference to Canadian products.

THE OMNIBUS CLAUSE

Many Liberal newspapers, in order to minimize the tariff concessions made by the Laurier Government to the United States are saying that only thirteen items are affected. As a matter of fact, thirteen classes of articles are directly specified, but these classes each include a number of different articles. Then there is the omnibus clause, which provides that the tariff on all articles not specially mentioned by name in the Customs Act, shall be seventeen and one-half per cent., instead of twenty per cent. It has been admitted by the Government that 189 classes of articles came into the country last year under this clause of the tariff. Some of these articles are not made in the country, and not likely to be. The Government simply loses the revenue on them, but the fact remains that Mr. Taft has dictated the Canadian tariff on a large number of articles.

The evil effects of the various tariff reductions that have been made by the Laurier Government will never be fully realized until a world-wide depression comes with declining prices. Then the Fielding tariff will be found wholly inadequate to protect Canadian industries.

POOR COMFORT FOR MANUFACTURERS

We are assured by Hon. Mr. Fielding that the reduced duties granted by Canada to the United States as a result of the conference at Albany, are to apply to imports from other foreign countries as well as to the imports from the United States. That is to say, the President of the United States not only makes Canada's tariff on American products, but causes our Government to lower the duty on imports from other countries as well. There can be no doubt about this, for our Government had no intention of lowering those duties before Mr. Fielding went to Albany, and we have received no reciprocal benefits from any of the foreign countries who will share these concessions with the United States. Certainly all those foreign countries have reason to thank Mr. Taft.

When the Canadian manufacturers affected complain that the reduction of duties on American imports will be injurious to them it will be poor comfort for them to be told that they must expect equally severe competition from other foreign countries.

PUNISHED FOR ITS SINS

The Review the other day asked its readers to compare the clean, honest and economical administration of affairs by the present Conservative Government of Ontario with the corruption, laxity and waste that prevailed under the Liberal administration that preceded it, suggesting that a similar transformation will take place at Ottawa when Mr. Robert L. Borden becomes Premier.

The Toronto Globe objects to this and declares that "in all the history of popular government there is no record so free from corruption, laxity and waste as that of the Liberal tenure of office in Ontario."

The Globe's memory is short. It is not very long since the indignant people of Ontario swept that Government from power by an overwhelming majority because of corruption so flagrant that even life-long Liberal voters could not tolerate it any longer. The attempt to bribe Gamey was the climax of a long period of disgraceful corruption in politics.

Ask any sincere temperance man or any honest liquor seller whether the Liberal administration of the license laws of Ontario was free from laxity. Again and again leading temperance men have expressed their approval of the great improvement that has taken place in the administration of the license laws since the Conservatives came into power.

Then as to waste. At the very time the newspapers were full of articles showing the increased cost of food to the general consumers, Government reports were issued showing clearly that under the careful and economical management of the Conservatives the cost of maintaining the various public institutions of the Province had been greatly reduced without in any way affecting the comfort of the inmates. Wasteful and extravagant methods of purchasing food supplies from political favorites had prevailed during the Liberal administration.

The Globe publishes some figures showing that the total expenditures have increased since the Conservatives came into power. The expenditures have undoubtedly increased owing to the opening up of New Ontario, but the new developments have produced so much extra revenue that it has been unnecessary to impose any additional taxation upon the people on account of the great public works that have been undertaken since the Conservatives came into power, while the settlement of the northern part of the province is making new business for the older sections of Ontario.

We might give many instances of corruption, laxity and waste during the Liberal regime, but what is the use of wasting space in describing the iniquities of a Government that has already been punished for its sins. We will say this much for the late Liberal Government of Ontario, and the Globe may publish the statement if it pleases: Corrupt, lax and wasteful as it was, worthy as it was of the severe public condemnation which it received, it was not half so rotten on the day of its death as the Liberal Government at Ottawa is to-day.

The first sailings of the local liners will be about a week later, as the north channel is still pretty well frozen over, and teams are crossing the ice at one point. The Giant's Strength

...By...
BASIL KING,
Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

There were many reasons why it should be a moment when all guards were down. They had lived through months of repressed emotion—months in which each had been a problem in the other's life. The thought of love had been beaten back by large, persistent questions of mutual rights and wrongs. Now it leaped to the front and claimed the field.

Before he realized what he was saying Winship had done that which for weeks he had been planning not to do. He had declared his love as any man to any woman, and he had implored her to be his wife. He had done it with a few quick, passionate words, in which there were none of the conditions and contingencies with which he had meant to speak. He had foreseen this moment, but he had foreseen it as one of complicated explanations. He had prepared his points as an ambassador prepares a treaty, and, lo, they had gone for naught! The unexpected sight of her, sitting on the red divan, simply dressed in black, as though in mourning for his mother, had swept away all his theories and left him nothing but his passion as a man. The minute she lifted her surprised, appealing eyes to his there had been only one thing to say.

There was no formal greeting between them. He slipped on to the divan without touching her hand.

"I didn't know you were back," he whispered. "Don't go away and leave me like that again."

"Did you miss me?" she asked, with childlike directness.

"It wasn't like missing—it was as if my own soul were gone. Every kind of experience has come to me all at once, and yet in your absence I seem to have been benumbed. It was as if I couldn't feel joy in my bit of triumph nor sorrow when we laid my mother in her grave. When you went all went, and I didn't know that you'd come back again."

"I didn't know you wanted me."

His response came in the tones which ring forever in a woman's heart and which she carries with her into paradise. The mere words Paula had heard before, but they had not, as now, been set to a music with which her own being sang. They were only the well used formulas which are all that language provides and to which the living voice alone lends the significance. But to Winship they seemed new. He uttered them as though they were sounds never before heard on earth, and Paula bowed her head, as though listening to words too sacred for the human ear.

It was a lyric moment, and it was soon over. A few eager questions, a few straightforward replies, and they were sitting with clasped hands, pledged to become man and wife.

The dull eyed, uniformed guardians paid them no attention. The visitors who entered the room walked briskly up to the much discussed portrait without giving them a glance. Only the woman in black and green looked down on them from her gilded frame with her ever unanswered what and why.

Perhaps it was the sight of that which recalled Winship to himself. All at once he seemed to fall from the blue ether, where he and Paula had floated alone, to find himself again part of an intricate society. He came down with a swift realization of the change which a few minutes had produced. There was no dash upon his happiness. He had only the sudden fear of owing his happiness to a trick.

He had not explained himself to Paula as he had intended. He had not made clear to her the distinction he drew between Paula, the woman made in the image of God, and Miss Trafford, the heiress of the man who had ruined his father, Roger Winship, in order to insure his own success. In their mutual situation love alone could not be the determining element, and she had given her promise without understanding a point which to him was essential. With what skill he could master he must weave the warning in, as a skillful composer will make the death motive heard in the very strains of the love chant.

"Paula, dear Paula," he whispered, "I've been afraid of you. I've been afraid you wouldn't come with me on the road I must travel."

"I'd go anywhere with you, Roger—anywhere on earth."

"It won't be an easy way, especially for you."

"Nothing will be hard with you to help me. I've plenty of courage to face whatever must be encountered. I've some skill, too," she added, with a smile.

"You'll need it, darling. Above all, you'll need faith in me."

"You couldn't overtax that, Roger."

"Our love can't take the common course. You and I can't be like a knight and a lady in a troubadour's romance. We have other things between us than just the fact that we love each other."

She looked at him with a puzzled expression and an air of listening only half attentively. A faroff clatter of footsteps caught her ear, with a hum of voices.

"Even before we met we were united by a rust"— Winship pursued.

"Oh don't let us talk of that now," she entreated.

"On the contrary, we must. Don't let us have any reserves between us. It's been in your thoughts all winter, as it's been in mine."

The sound of footsteps drew nearer, and she hastened to speak.

"But it's all over now, Roger. All I have is yours—all I shall ever have"—

She stopped abruptly. The quick, incisive ring of one of the approaching voices frightened her.

"You yourself will be enough, dear," Winship said, with a significant inflection.

But she was no longer listening. She sat erect, alert and pale. The voice was surely Laura's. The party were advancing, not directly behind them, but through a series of rooms at the side. Even Winship's attention was diverted to them now.

"If you'd only listen to me, George," Laura was protesting, "we shouldn't have had this endless tramp. I knew from the beginning that it was down this way. No wonder poor Aunt Trafford is tired out."

Winship and Paula sprang to their feet. Instinctively they moved apart. Winship retreated a few paces from the divan, while Paula turned to confront the members of her family as they came in, in irregular procession, from the adjoining room. Mrs. George was in the forefront.

"Why, here's Paula, Uncle Trafford," she called back from the threshold. "After all the hunt we've had we find her on the spot."

"There's no help for it," the girl reflected, feeling less brave than a minute or two ago. "I must tell them—and do it now."

"For goodness' sake, Paula," Mrs. Trafford panted as she marched in, fanning herself, "I wish you wouldn't spirit yourself away where no one knows where to look for you. Your father's been turning the house upside down. He's been as crazy as if you'd been kidnaped."

"It's all right now since we've found her," Paul Trafford laughed, striding up to his daughter and pinching her cheek. "So this is the famous portrait. Well, it's you, sure enough."

All eyes were bent on the portrait. To Winship, standing remote and in the background, no one had given a glance. Paula kept herself rigid and erect, waiting for her moment. It was not till her father turned again toward her after a few comments from the family that she knew the hour had come.

"Papa," she said huskily, "this is Mr. Roger Winship, who painted my portrait. I've promised to marry him."

Trafford stood still, as if turned to stone. Mrs. Trafford glanced backward from her seat on the divan. George and Laura wheeled round from their contemplation of the portrait. It was the sort of shock that translates itself slowly to the thought, more slowly still into action.

Winship remained motionless, his gleaming eyes fixed on the man who had struck his father down. His trained observation watched, while dull, ashen hues stole into Paul Trafford's face and the determined lips settled themselves, shade by shade, into the lines of pain.

The silence was long. It was only by degrees that the full meaning of the situation made itself clear. The eyes of the family that had been fixed in amazed contemplation on Winship now turned toward Trafford, waiting for a sign.

"Paula, go home," he commanded at last. "Take her," he added to his wife. There was a quiver in his voice as if he could say no more.

Paula advanced toward Winship and held out her hand. He took it and held it long, but no word was spoken between them.

"Go!" Trafford cried, with the brief threat of anger, and Paula turned.

She went out first, with bowed head, through the door by which they had all come in. Her mother followed, pressing her handkerchief to her lips. Trafford nodded to George and Laura to precede him. George went out obediently, very pale. On the threshold of the room Laura turned and looked back at Winship. It was the only glance of recognition, if recognition it was, that had been vouchsafed him. Trafford himself left last.

Winship stood still, listening to the tramp, tramp, of their footsteps through the long defile of rooms. He listened while the sound grew fainter and till at last it died away. Then he flung himself on the divan and covered his face with his hands.

"Paul Trafford has got it in the heart," he muttered to himself. "My God! I've done it—after the long years. Even if I lose her now—the victory is mine."

CHAPTER XII.

LITTLE was said between Paula and her mother on the homeward drive. With her head thrown back into the corner of the carriage, Mrs. Trafford sobbed gently.

"Oh, mother, don't!" Paula pleaded from time to time. But Mrs. Trafford only sobbed the more.

"It's my fault," she moaned. "I never should have allowed you to think of that absurd portrait. I might have known that some evil would happen when you began to take up with your father's enemies. It's my fault, and I never shall forgive myself."

"No, mother, dear, it's not your fault. The painting of the portrait didn't make me love him. I loved him before that, I can see it now."

"Don't say such a thing. It's shameful."

"But I did, mother. I did, even if it were shameful. I loved him before the duke introduced him to me. I've never ceased to think of him from the first moment I saw him."

"Oh, the poor duke! I wonder you have the heart to mention him. If you'd only married him, as you should have done, this dreadful scandal would not have come upon us. The newspapers are sure to get hold of it. They always do. I can't begin to think what your father will say after the way he's spoiled you."

Paula sat erect and silent. Her mother had touched the one point that was vital. What would Paul Trafford say and do? There was no question to be asked beyond that. Beside that nothing counted.

They reached home at almost the same moment as George and Laura. The father was following alone.

"It's my fault," Mrs. Trafford broke out anew as they all met in the great entrance hall. "I should never have allowed her to think of it. I should have insisted on her marrying the Duke of Wiltshire. Better that she should have taken that Comte de Presles, though I never could endure him. But anybody—anybody—rather than such disgrace as this! No! I shall never forgive myself. Never! Never!"

"If it's any one's fault, Aunt Julia," Trafford spoke up, trying to be consoling, "it's mine. I shouldn't have told her anything about the Winships, to begin with. I should have known the kind of ardent, crazy way in which she'd take it."

"Come up to my room and talk about it," Mrs. Trafford begged. "I must have something to say to your uncle when he comes in."

Moving heavily and moaning as she went, Mrs. Trafford mounted the splendid staircase. George and Laura followed. Excluded from the approaching conference, Paula nevertheless went forward thinkly behind them

At the turning of the stairway he glanced down at her as she lay.

At the foot of the stairs she paused. The sound of wheels had caught her ear. Her father was returning. She would see him and make one plea, even if it were a silent one. She stepped aside, standing inconspicuously by the pedestal of a statue.

Flinging his hat and raincoat to the footman in the antechamber, Paul Trafford entered, with set lips and rapid stride. In his eyes was the look with which boards of directors were familiar, but which Paula had never seen. It was the look that quenched inquiry before it could rise and bore down opposition as if in sheer insolence of strength. It was the look that turned weaker men into enemies and drew hatred from those who were made rich by his co-operation. To Paula it was new and frightening. She crept out of the shadow of the statue and stretched out her arms toward him.

"Oh, papa, don't look at me like that!"

The long-gathered, or puffed sleeve, completed by a three or four-inch close-fitting ruff, almost identical with that which had such vogue several years ago, is now being inserted in the newest shirt-waists.

Certainly my condition was desperate, and it seemed from the despondent feelings that swept over me that I would lose my reason. I happened to read about Dr. Hamilton's Pills and bought five boxes from the druggist. Such body-cleansing pills I never used; they were mild and yet quite strong enough to drive all the humors out of the blood. Woeful Waste of Whiskey

The blacklisters of the city were under a very strong temptation on Saturday night on George street at Simcoe, about 8 o'clock, when a shoe box containing two bottles of whiskey jarred out of the back of a buggy onto the road. The bottles broke with a comfortable smash, but the driver didn't know of the calamity or else thought silence the best policy to pursue.

Women Suffrage Debated Upon

The above was the decision of the judges as the result of a most amusing and interesting debate on the "Suffragette Question" at the meeting of the ladies' Literary of St. Peter's T.A.S. on Friday evening last.

The leaders of the affirmative were Misses F. Picard and I. Coughlin, and the opposite side was ably defended by Misses M. Grady and R. Fitzgerald. The judges were Rev. Father Mather, and Rev. Father Casey, of the cathedral staff, and Miss L. Deanard, president of the ladies' Literary Association.

The chief argument for the defence was that based upon the wording of the statutes, which grant the privilege of voting to "every man who has completed his twenty-first year, who is a British subject either by birth or naturalization, and who has lived for a certain length of time in a specified locality."

The speaker contended that to give the word "man" a specific rather than a generic meaning, was to interpret that term in a sense at variance with the common acceptance of the word in other important writings. Therefore if the word "man" is accepted as being synonymous with the word "mankind," it includes the weaker sex, and since a woman can be twenty-one, and also fulfil the other conditions named in the statutes she should have the same right to vote as the men have.

The affirmative dealt, not so much with woman's right to vote as with her fitness for voting, and, since it would be a logical sequence, her fitness also, for holding public offices.

Besides, it was contended, women haven't time to vote, or, rather, they haven't time to attend to all the various responsibilities that hinge on the privilege of voting. A woman's place is in her home, bringing up her boys so that they may make good men who will vote right when their time comes.

Again, if women are complaining about having too much to do already, why should they be so anxious to add another trouble and worry to the many they now have.

Neither do the majority of the women want the franchise. "If, as the defense declared, women were influential in passing nine-tenths of the votes already, why should they worry about anything more."

During the evening the following delightful numbers were much enjoyed:—

Instrumental—Miss N. Shevlin.
Vocal Duet—Misses G. Radkins and E. McCabe.
Dialogue—Miss H. Kane, and Messrs. H. Callaghan and N. Phelan.

Before the close of the meeting a vote of thanks, moved by Miss M. Carveth and seconded by Miss M. Connor, was tendered to Miss L. Deanard, the president, in consideration of her past capable and generous services to the society. Miss Deanard leaves on Monday for Belleville, where she has accepted a position as teacher in the Belleville Deaf and Dumb Institute.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Bedford, of Lakefield. Miss Trypheta Chasty, of Peterborough, assisted the bride, while Mr. Nole Milburn, brother of the bride, supported the groom, the bride was the recipient of a large number of beautiful and costly presents. After the ceremony the guests to the number of about fifty sat down to a sumptuous repast.

At an early hour the happy couple left for their future home in Emily.

All In the Training.

When Josephine was six years old she was taken for the first time to see a trained animal show, and went home much pleased with the performance. As she was at times slow to obey, her mother thought this a good time to teach her a lesson, so she said: "Don't you think, Josephine, that if dogs and ponies and monkeys can learn to obey so well, a little girl like you, who knows much more than animals, should obey even more quickly?" "Of course I would, mother," came the instant reply, "if I had been as well trained as they have been."

Value of Capital.

Once upon a time two utter bankrupts were considering ways and means of getting needed money.

"I know how we can make $9," said one.

"Raise a dollar note to ten by placing a cipher after the one."

"Where will we raise the dollar?"

Then the scheme failed for want of capital.

Moral.—The great financial difficulty is in raising the first dollar.

Manias of Authors.

Darwin always practiced on his old fiddle before writing; Chateaubriand while dictating to his secretary was in the habit of walking in his bare feet; Schiller and Goethe could not write unless their feet were on ice; Lord Derby always filled his mouth with brandy cherries; Fenimore Cooner used to chew gumdrops; Byron filled his pockets with truffles; Theophile Gautier burned incense.

Given Away.

A minister in Cornwall who was making a call upon a member of his flock who was a backslider asked:

"What's come over you that I don't see you at church at all now?"

"Heavens, man, you can't have seen me because I sit behind the pillar!"

"The pillar, John? Good gracious, the pillar! Why, it's two years since it was removed from the front of your seat!"

LECTURE ON METEORITES BEFORE ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY

The regular meeting of the local centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada will be held on Tuesday night at the Collegiate Institute. Mr. H. B. Collier, Phm. B., will lecture on meteorites, explaining their origin and relation to comets. Mr. Collier has been making a study of meteorites for some years, and in connection with his studies has visited New York city and Toronto. While in New York he secured a number of fine studies, and these, with others, will be shown during the lecture. The famous Victoria meteorite, loaned by Chancellor Burwash, of Toronto University will be on exhibition. This meteorite was first secured from the Indians in the Northwest, where it had been held for hundreds of years. Its weight is 324 pounds, and it is composed of 90 per cent. iron, 9 per cent. Nickle and the remainder in other minerals.

A cordial invitation is extended to the public to be present at the lecture. No admission fee will be charged.

AN INTERESTING JOURNAL.

Conducted For the Benefit of Russian Thieves and Vagabonds.

"This is the age of specialization in journalism as in other things the world over," says Spencer Kerr, a widely-known English journalist. "Nearly every trade or profession has its organ. But in the ancient city of Moscow, where I spent several weeks last year, an editor has discovered an entirely new field for newspaper enterprise which appeals to a numerous clientele. His paper, which made its first appearance not so long ago, is called Bostaaka Gazeta, which, interpreted, means The Barefooted Man's Gazette. It is a little weekly journal, consisting of one double sheet of printed matter. It is ostensibly run by thieves and vagabonds for the benefit of their kind.

"The bulk of its contents consists of contributions from burglars," continued Mr. Kerr, "and other folk who prey upon society, in which they describe their successful exploits. Its tone is humorous and racy. The text is enlivened with comic sketches, some of which are uncommonly well done. Unless the police suppress it, it bids fair to have a prosperous career. It is not lacking in advertisements, most of them of a decidedly unique character. In one issue, for instance, a young man announces that 'being full of energy and temperament, and having a loving heart, he seeks a life partner in the shape of a young lady with small means.' The adventurer goes on to say that 'having practiced housebreaking from tender youth, he is now, at five and twenty, as expert a burglar as any in Moscow, and can therefore assure his wife comfort and even luxury.'

"The 'office' of the paper is situated in a shabby enough street," added Mr. Kerr, "opposite a small theatre. It is a private flat, and its small dimensions—a room overlooking the courtyard—seem too big for the table, chair and stove which furnish it. The chair is occupied by a shock-headed youth with long black hair, intelligent eyes, and an odor of greasy sheepskin, and stale tobacco. He always says the editor is out, and contributors are invited to leave their offerings on the table, where lie an empty vodka bottle, a tea-stained piece of blotting paper, and a few cigarette ends. Nobody knows where it is printed, least of all the police, who have been on the track since the first number appeared. It comes out once a week and costs five kopecks, or about two and a half cents."

One on Father.

William had just returned from college, resplendent in peg top trousers, silk hosiery, a fancy waistcoat and a necktie that spoke for itself. He entered the library, where his father was reading. The old gentleman looked up and surveyed his son. The longer he looked the more disgusted he became.

"Son," he finally blurted out, "you look like a d— fool!"

Later the old major who lived next door came in and greeted the boy heartily. "William," he said, with undisguised admiration, "you look exactly like your father did twenty-five years ago when he came back from school!"

"Yes," replied William, with a smile, "so father was just telling me."

Tweed April 4th.—A man named Colwell, an employee of the Seymour Light and Power Company, who was working on the power line to Sulphide, was drowned in the Clare River, near here, Sunday. He and a companion had taken out an old log canoe for a paddle, and by accident the canoe was upset. His companion swam to shore, but Colwell, being unable to swim, was drowned. The body has not yet been recovered. Colwell was 24 years of age and unmarried. His home was in Queensboro.

CRITICIZED THE SUNDAY CONFERENCE

Rev. C. H. Coon Expresses Surprise at Action of Hon. Mr. Fielding in Connection With Tariff Negotiations

Rev. C. H. Coon in his morning discourse at Mark street church yesterday, talking on the subject of "Sabbath Observance," took occasion to refer to the recent violation of the day's sanctity, by President Taft, and the Honorable Mr. Fielding, when they held a conference on the tariff question a short time ago in Albany on a Sunday.

This, he said, was not so much a matter of wonder on the part of the President, whose views are well known on the subject, but that a member of the Cabinet of the Dominion Government, shouldd be a party to it, and above all, that the meeting should have been brought about by Rev. J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Globe, would certainly seem to be an unnecessary disregard for the sacredness of the Lord's day.

TORONTO VISITORS LIKED THE WATER

Everybody who comes from Toronto is not a lover of water. In fact some of Toronto's citizens have a reputation for having a well developed taste for a variety of liquids and it was a pleasant surprise as well as an indication of the purity of the supply for Peterborough Masons to note the avidity with which the brethren from Toronto, who were here on Friday night, consumed water. Glass after glass of water disappeared. In fact the visitors consumed so much and asked questions about the water at the banquet that it was the subject of comment among the local brethren. In explanation, the Toronto men stated that it was seldom they got a drink of good water in Toronto. As a result they found the good water of Peterborough a real treat.

THEATRICAL

"THE CLIMAX"

In these days of dramatic depravity when the central theme for the average play is the wronged woman or the deserted wife, it is a positive relief to welcome such a clean, wholesome, undeniably great play as "The Climax," which comes to The Grand Opera House next Thursday, April 7th.

The nearest approach to villainy in "The Climax" is at present the much discussed mental suggestion. This wholesome play tells a story of a young woman, named Adelina von Hagen, who came to New York from the middle West, to study music and to develop her voice as a singer. She resides in the household of her instructor, Luigi Golfanti, and is beloved by his son, Pietro. She is also beloved by a doctor of medicine, John Raymond. The girl has rejected both suitors in order to follow that delightful will-o-the-wisp, a stage career. Dr. Raymond employs mental suggestion to destroy the girl's ability to sing, and succeeds in doing so. Finding herself deprived of her voice, Adelina consents to wed Dr. Raymond. On their bridal morning, the doctor, afflicted with remorse, confesses his perfidy; Adelina recovers her vocal faculty, and the doctor withdraws, leaving her to happiness and song. The same cast which appeared in Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto will be seen here. Grand Opera House, Thursday, April 7th. Seat sale opens Tuesday, April 5th, at box office.

EXECUTIVE TO PICK TEAM AND ARRANGE FOR GAMES

One of last season's senior City League baseball supporters has asked the Review to bring before the league at its organization meeting a matter which he believes to be a very important one. It is his opinion that an executive, composed of a representative from each team, should be appointed to pick a nine to represent Peterborough, and that games be arranged for to be played here with outside teams. The executive, he suggests, should be given the power by the league to pick the team and to arrange for games, not alone on holidays, but also throughout the season.

The idea is a good one, but it is a question whether it would be possible for an executive, such as proposed, to work harmoniously together.

The league will meet within the next few days, and the suggestion will be brought before the meeting.

LINDSAY GOLFERS SUGGEST LEAGUE

Lindsay Post:—A meeting of the golfers was held last evening in the council chamber to elect officers and discuss matters concerning the coming season.

Very little business outside of the election of officers was done.

Efforts will be made to form a league between Lindsay, Peterborough, Port Hope and Cobourg for the summer. This will be the first attempt of this kind for the local golfers, but as other centres have succeeded in forming leagues, it was decided that an effort would be made to this end.

It was also decided and finally placed in the green committee's hands, that a man be placed at the links to attend them through the summer.

Concerning the local schedule between the players, the matter was left for future consideration.

In the election of officers the following were appointed:—

President—Judge Harding.
Vice-Pres.—J. G. Edwards.
Treasurer—R. Ross.
Secretary—L. V. O'Connor.
Captain—G. A. Little.
Green Committee—Judge McMillan, R. Kylie and G. Matthie.

A meeting of the lady golfers will be held in the council chamber on Monday evening next at 8.15 to elect officers for the present year.

BASEBALL

The baseball enthusiasts of the West End Athletic Club took advantage of the fine weather of Saturday and held a light workout at Riverside Park. This club is working overtime these days, and a likely looking ball team will be in uniform when the season opens. It is reported that a first baseman from no other place than Lindsay has been secured.

THE TURF

"Collingwoodd Rooker," a handsome stepper with a 2.11 1-4 mark, has been purchased by Mrs. William Whittom, Lundy's Lane, from Mr. John Charles, of Toronto. The horse arrived here Friday morning, and he will be entered and driven in the events at the local track this summer.

Gas Distended His Stomach

Caused Palpitation, and Prevented Sleep—When Health Was Gone, Cure Followed Use of "Nerviline."

"My last wish will be," writes Harry P. Pellard, a well-known boot and shoe traveler of Hartford, "that everyone with a bad stomach may learn as I did, before it's too late, that Nerviline is the one remedy to cure. Why, I was in mighty bad shape, my digestion was all wrong, and every night I would waken with a start and find my heart jumping like a threshing machine. This was caused by gas on my stomach pressing against my heart. When I started to use Nerviline I got better mighty fast. It is certainly a grand remedy for the traveling man, keeps your stomach in order, cures cramps, prevents lumbago or rheumatism, breaks up chest colds and sore throat—in fact there hasn't been an ache or pain inside or outside for the past two years that I haven't cured with Nerviline. Do you wonder I recommend it?"

Testimonial No. 4890

For general household use Nerviline has no equal; it will cure the aches and ailments of the entire family—refuse anything but Nerviline. 50c per bottle, trial size 25c, all dealers or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

Mustn't Tip In Columbia.

Washington, D.C., April 4.—A subcommittee of the House committee on the District of Columbia, headed by Representative Campbell of Kansas, yesterday reported favorably a bill by Representative Murphy of Missouri, under which all tip-giving or tip-receiving in hotels, restaurants and cafes in Washington shall constitute a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500.

Not only are waiters, stewards and porters prohibited from receiving tips and managers and proprietors of public places enjoined from allowing their employes to do so, but patrons are prohibited, under the same terms, from offering tips.

Pennsylvania Railway Improvements.

New York, April 4.—The Pennsylvania Railroad opened to public inspection for the first time Saturday 16.5 miles of the most expensive construction work, foot for foot, ever attempted—namely, its tunnel and terminal improvement from Harrison, N.J., to Sunnyside, L.I. The average cost of a mile of steam railroad is about $25,000; the cost per mile of the tunnel and terminal improvement has been more than $9,000,000. The company has thus far expended $102,000,000, and will expend $160,000,000 before the improvement is completed. Train service is due to begin late in June, with an initial card of 1,000 trains daily.

Owen Wister Suspected as Smuggler.

Tucson, Ariz., April 4.—Owen Wister, novelist and author of "The Virginian," arrived in Tucson Friday, coming from El Paso with his wife and child. They are on a trip through the south and west for health and recreation. They crossed the international border into Juarez Saturday, and on the return the author was taken from the car with Mrs. Wister and subjected to a search as a suspected opium smuggler. Nothing was found.

New Naval Base For Germany?

London, April 4.—The English press publishes an unconfirmed report that the German Admiralty intends to create a special cruiser squadron for service in the Pacific, with some South American port as a base. The motive for this extraordinary measure is described as a deliberate intention to develop German commercial interests along the west coast of South America and the South Seas, and the fantastic suggestion is offered that a strong British squadron should be sent to New Zealand or Australia as a counter demonstration.

There may be a practice cruise of the German squadron similar to that undertaken recently by the American fleet, but the story of the maintenance of a permanent naval base in South America by the Kaiser's navy is a silly invention.

Mad Mullah Out Again.

Aden, Arabia, April 4.—The ferocious campaign of Mohammed Abdullah of Somaliland, "the Mad Mullah," against the sultanates under British protection, continues unchecked.

Eight hundred of the tribesmen friendly to the sultanates have been slaughtered, vast areas laid waste and towns razed. Natives in great numbers are fleeing to the coast.

It is expected here that this will lead to another expedition against the Mad Mullah, who has caused the British Government great anxiety for many years.

RESOLUTION VS. CHEQUE.

A Story of the Late Sir George A. Drummond.

Mr. Robert Bickerdike, M.P., in paying a tribute to the memory of the late Senator Drummond the other day, told the following story:

"Sir George Drummond was an able man. He had a great mastery of figures. I have had many business dealings with him and found him strong and able. And in his position as chairman of the Banking Committee, he rendered good service."

There is a story in which he figured as a young man, when he was secretary of the Redpath Sugar Refinery, and which connects him in an amusing way with the late "Barney" Devlin.

Nothing amiss at all with the connection; but I do not think it is generally known.

The Redpath people wanted to get a new charter through at Ottawa—a charter organizing the company into a limited liability concern.

"Barney Devlin was asked to put the thing through. The latter did the business in good shape, and Sir George, then plain Mr. Drummond, meeting Barney after the job was done, took him by the hand and said: 'You have done splendidly. You must have put a great deal of work and trouble into the job. Our directors meet to-morrow, and I am sure they will do something for you which will please you.'

"Barney looked forward with interest, for he was rather hard up at the time—excellent fellow that he was.

"The next day Barney received an envelope which he thought contained a cheque. When he opened it he found that it contained a resolution of thanks and appreciation passed by the board of directors.

"Barney used some strong words and put the resolution in his pocket. He went to the Bank of Montreal and asked Mr. King, the then manager, for the loan of $300.

"Sorry I can't do it," was the reply. "We have loaned you money before and you have not paid us. Very sorry. Of course, nothing against you, Barney, but you know I have directors to face, and business is business."

"But say, Barney," added Mr. King, "Perhaps you could give some collateral?"

"Faith, I can," said Barney, pulling out and presenting the fine resolution.

Mr. King looked at it and handed it back.

"Not worth a d——."

Barney was turning to go out when he met Mr. Drummond.

The latter shook him warmly by the hand.

"Did what we did yesterday please you?"

"Do you mean the resolution? Why, Mr. King says it's not worth a d——."

"Bless me," said Mr. Drummond, "It cost me nearly an hour to draft."

A Le Roi Mine Romance.

In 1892 Maurice Yemil, a merchant of Moscow, Idaho, sold a suit of clothes for $60,000, writes Harold Sands in "Romances of Rossland" in the February Canadian Magazine.

Of course there is a story in that transaction, and a wonderful story it is; nothing less than the romance of Rossland and its mines. Yensil didn't get his $60,000 down on the nail. It was five years before he received the final payment on that suit of "hand-me-downs."

Truth to tell, Yensil did not expect to get a cent for the clothes. One day an acquaintance he had known in various mining camps of the West wandered into his store in Moscow dressed in his best and his worst. In other words the man's clothes were much the worse for wear, but they were all he had.

"Just come down from Rossland, broke," he explained to his friend the merchant. "I've got nothing except these 2,000 share of Le Roi gold mine. Give me a suit of clothes and stake me to a meal and they're yours."

Yensil did so, and threw the certificate for the mining stock into the back of his safe. He was out a suit of clothes and "four-bits"; that was the way he figured.

By 1897 he had received in dividends and from the sale of the stock the sum of $60,000. The great Le Roi mine, after nearly breaking the hearts of those who stood so splendidly by it in the days of adversity, had first developed into the most prominent property in British Columbia, and then had been bought by the British company headed by the late Whitaker Wright, of somewhat painful memory.

When the Americans who held the mine disposed of it to Wright for about $4,000,000, Yensil cashed in for that suit of clothes.

Ragusan Wit.

Last autumn a Toronto lady got a taste of real Russian Jew repartee. One morning a strange dog drifted into her back yard, and, stretching himself under the shade of a fruit tree, died. The problem of how to dispose of the beast was worrying her. A little later she was picking flowers in her garden when a rag and bottle man drove by and stopped.

"Any rags?" he called in his Yiddish dialect.

"No," said the lady.

"Any bones or bottles?" he persisted.

"No; go away," said the lady tartly.

"Any oldt boots?" he went on. "I give five cents each for oldt boots."

"No; please go away," said the lady. Then a thought flashed upon her. Perhaps he could use the dead dog in his business. Perhaps the hide would be worth his taking. So she said:

"Do you want a dog?"

"Yah!" cried the man, jumping off the wagon; "where iss idt?"

She took him around to the back of the house and showed him the unwelcome guest. When he found that the animal was dead, he flew into a spluttering rage, and as he raced back to his wagon he hissed at the lady:

"Don't you vandt idt? Don't you like idt? Don't you vandt idt to eedt?"

With this crushing retort, which would be a most savage and significant insult among his own people, he drove hissing away.

The old or frayed rag is a delusion, not a duster. Its particles of lint and ravellings will make double work.

CATCHING VOTES.

How Candidates Invoke the Sign of the X.

In these days there is no delectable Duchess of Devonshire to go the round of a shaky constituency, and buy up votes at the price of a kiss.

True, there is plenty of "lip" of a kind, and still more "cheek"—both feminine and masculine—brought to bear on the "free and independent" electors of the twentieth century; but as for kisses and caresses, these artful wiles of erstwhile lovely canvassers are now only practised by unlovely candidates on innocent babes and sucklings.

Up-to-date would-be M.P.'s are, however, well aware that the way to an elector's vote is often through his offspring; hence, when making a personal canvass, a kiss is frequently bestowed on the baby of the house, in the hope that it will be duly returned by its time-honored "sign of the x" opposite the giver's name on the ballot-paper at the fateful poll.

And, writing of babes, one is reminded of the fact that at the general election in 1900 an infant in arms—or, rather, in perambulator—was one of the most interesting of the novel aids which secured the triumphant return of Mr. Marshall Hall, K.C., for the Southport Division of Lancashire.

As he was wheeled about, this juvenile canvasser made quite a brave show, sporting the colors of his candidate beneath the shelter of a silk Union Jack, which served as a cover for his carriage. A large card on a frame fixed to his "pram" proclaimed to the world that:

"Every youngster born alive
Is either Liberal or Conservative.
I'm a Conservative, not very tall,
So please vote for my friend, Mr. Marshall Hall."

Poor doggerel, perhaps, but certainly one of those novelties which add to the gaiety of electioneering.

More than one member of Parliament has literally sung himself into the House of Commons, but there is probably only one who has been returned through the vocal efforts of his wife.

At the time of the 1900 general election, the Hon. Arthur Brand was helping to fight his country's battles in South Africa. In order that his return for the Wisbech Division of Cambridgeshire should not be jeopardized by his absence, his devoted "better half" threw herself heart and soul into his electioneering campaign.

She laid siege to the hearts and votes of the electorate with the moving influence of sweet song, before which opposition disappeared and surrender became the order of the day. The absent candidate got in at the head of the poll.

In the course of the same general election the Right Hon. Arthur Balfour did a good stroke of business by "kicking off" at a match between Manchester City and Stoke, and the veracious chronicler of the incident has left it on record that the ball traveled a distance of some twenty yards as the result of the kick; while it also helped to put the ex-Prime Minister in training for Westminster, the goal for which he was striving.

Mr. Winston Churchill, when fighting for his seat in the last general election of the nineteenth century, descended a coal mine to unburden himself to the men.

In more than one instance members of the canine race have been employed in canvassing for would-be members of Parliament, but never probably with more disastrous results than in one of the North London constituencies nine years ago.

The four-footed canvasser in this case was a fox-terrier, which ran through the streets with a card round his neck bearing the candidate's name, and barking vigorously as he ran. His tour of the constituency was, however, suddenly brought to a full stop, for, unfortunately, a heavy wagon ran over the dog, and crushed the life out of the poor animal.

Gladstone's Magnetism.

The magnetism with which Mr. Gladstone always seemed to invest his words is illustrated by the following curious little story. At Hawarden the conversation once turned to walnuts, and Mr. Gladstone, in a pause, said, in thrilling tones, "I have not eaten a walnut since I was a boy of sixteen"; and then added, in a cadence of melancholy dignity, "nor, indeed, a nut of any kind." "The auditor who told me the story," says Mr. Benson, "said that the remark was received like an oracle, and that he had for the moment the impression that he had been the recipient of a singular and momentous confidence, such was the magnetic force of the speaker. The effect, I used to think, was augmented by the forcible burr with which the letter "r" was pronounced, which gave a curious richness to the whole intonation."

A Well-Guarded Bank.

The Bank of England is considered to have one of the most nearly impregnable vaults of any bank in the world. It is sixty-six feet below the level of the street. Above it is twenty feet of concrete, holding seven feet of water, and below the same concrete barrier and depth of water. In this manner tunneling becomes impossible while with the soldier guard posted every night the conservative Briton has reason to believe in the security of his "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street."

Collapsed on Scaffold.

The Calgary Herald's Fort Saskatchewan correspondent, telling of the hanging of Henry Zhibley, an Austrian, aged 70, for the murder of his wife, recently, says:

Zhibley, old and bent, and supported by two constables of the mounted police, tottered the few steps from his cell in the guard room here to the scaffold in the police carpenter's shop.

He fainted when the black cap was placed over his head and the noose adjusted. He was barely conscious when the Greek priest muttered the last few words of prayer. As the executioner was about to spring the trap, the old man fainted dead away in the arms of the two constables who were supporting him. A few drops of whisky were then poured down the doomed man's throat, and he partly revived. Constables supported him in an upright position over the trap while the priest said the last words and the hangman dropped the lever that thrust the feeble old man into eternity. His neck was broken by the fall, and he was dead within three minutes after the drop.

AN ALPINE CLIMBER.

How a Girl Distinguished Herself on New Year's Day.

By CLARA A. BURTON.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"An odd New Year's, but a grand one," thought Marcia Wells as she paused for a moment on a spur of the Alps and gazed down upon what seemed the world outspread before her.

Five years she had been traveling now into many remote parts of the world—studying, investigating, exploring—a strong, self confident and courageous girl from the first, and gaining experience and new ambitions with her progress until now, at the end of only five years, she was gaining a reputation as a mountain climber, a student explorer, a writer of travels.

But there was no exultation in her eyes as they looked out across the world, dwarfed by height and distance.

With the conquering of obstacles was coming a broader, more earnest purpose in life that was above personality, and, moreover, over this day was a shadow that made even the conquering of the great heights of ambition seem trivial and small.

Even as they started up the mountain they had passed a white faced guide with a story of his party being caught by a snowslide and carried over a precipice. He was the only one saved and had been swept many rods down the mountain side and saved himself only at the very brink of the precipice by cutting the connecting rope.

The severed bit of cord still dangled from his waist, overlooked and forgotten in the horror of the catastrophe.

And among the party were friends and acquaintances of Marcia Wells met with on her travels. They had started to climb the very mountain she was going up, and by rapid progress she had hoped to meet them somewhere near the top.

And now all that was left was the guide, stumbling and slipping down the mountain, white faced, hatless and dishevelled.

They had listened to his story, their own faces whitening, but nothing could be done, so Marcia Wells had said she would go on and climb the mountain as planned.

They were now more than two-thirds of the way up, and Marcia Wells was standing upon a narrow shelf of the spur, so narrow that only her heels held, with her toes projecting over, but her face was calm and her nerves steady.

Many times had she been in such places before. On either side were the guides, grasping the rope which secured them together and holding it taut to assist her in rounding the almost sheer wall of the spur.

But for a long time she stood there gazing, then slowly, inch by inch, for that was the only way, she continued to edge her way across.

"The signorina would better have taken the other route," the advance guide said anxiously, "and even now it will be easier to go back. This way is shunned even by the more reckless of the guides."

"It is the way the other party went," Marcia answered briefly. "Maybe it was a mistake on their part, but it is too late to change that now. They started this way and were intending to scale the sheer wall beyond, the guide told us. It must have been near here that the slide struck them. Doubtless, from his story, they all perished, but until we have absolute proof to the contrary there is a chance they did not. It is for us to find out. Ah!"

The exclamation was a startled one, and she raised a curved palm above her eyes in quick inquiry and gazed long and earnestly into the depths below.

"Henri," she called quickly, "you and Fritz tighten the rope and hold it firmly against the wall of the rock. I am going to lean out far enough to see over that bulge yonder, and the rope must sustain me."

Both of the guides whitened.

"It may be death," gasped Henri in remonstrance. "It is dangerous as you are now, and if you lean out your heels may slip, and then—and then you will go down and drag us with you. It may be death."

"It may be life for the ten persons the snow carried over. I do not know, but there is the edge of something dark just over the bulge of rock, and I thought I saw it stir. You may hold your knives ready, and if I fall you can cut the rope quickly and save yourselves. Now!"

They pressed the rope sharply against the rock wall behind and braced themselves as firmly as possible to hold it from slipping or swaying. Marcia, without even looking at them again, leaned out, and out, and out, until only the rope sustained her weight, her heels resting against the narrow shelf keeping her in position. Then, after what seemed an endless suspense to the men at the end of the rope, her hand motioned for them to draw her back to her footing.

"Yes, it is the party," she said as she regained her balance, "and some of them are alive. We must go down to them."

"But the rope is not long enough," both guides protested in a breath, "and we cannot"—

"Yes, I think we can," Marcia said, "or at least we can try. There are several fissures large enough for our boots to grasp. One of us will stay here, another be let down to a fissure as far as the rope will reach, and so on. There are three of you guides and myself. Four lengths of the rope will reach down to the party, I think. You have plenty of strong twine, and that can be used to draw the rope up from shelf to shelf as the party are rescued."

"A girl could never draw a heavy body up this wall," fearfully, "and—and if the rope should slip away and be lost"—

"We will take that risk. And I shall be strong enough to draw them up. I have done such things before. Now, Henri," as she worked her way along the shelf to his side and motioned for the other guides to follow, "you will stay here and lower the rest of us to the next fissure, then fasten the twine to the rope and let it down for Fritz to lower Gaspard and myself to the next fissure; then Gaspard will lower me, and I will fasten the rope to some rock projection, or if I cannot find one I will drill a hole in the rock and drive in a spike.

"Then I will go down hand over hand and see if any of the party are able to help themselves.

"If they are, I will climb back to my fissure and draw them up, or perhaps some of them will be able to help me. If not, I will have to go down to fasten each one separately, then climb back and draw him up.

"And, now, mind, all of you," her voice ringing sharp, "there must not be a hand to tremble or an eye to waver. On each of us the lives of all will depend."

"Perhaps one of us men would better go down to the lowest fissure," hesitated Henri.

"No; I will go myself. I can do the work better, I think, and my muscles have been trained for and by such work. It may be the entire party are alive and we can save them all."

They started to follow the plan the girl had laid down. Marcia, having assumed the leadership, naturally took it upon herself to be the first one lowered.

The rope having been fastened about her waist, she was lowered to the fissure below. The distance was not great, but only a steady pair of eyes, swinging, as she did, over a giddy height, could have enabled her to maintain her equanimity.

Having reached the fissure, she unbound the rope. It was drawn up, and Fritz was next lowered, then Gaspard.

When the three were ready to go a step lower Marcia, still taking the lead, was lowered to the next fissure, and Gaspard followed.

It was now Marcia's part to do the rest alone.

But this step was more dangerous than the others, for there was but one pair of arms to bear her weight, and the distance was greater than either of the two former descents.

The brave girl made a loop at the end of the rope, and, instead of having it placed about her waist, took it in her hands that she might drop whatever distance the rope would not reach.

And so, swinging by her two hands, she was lowered to the rope's full length.

There still remained six feet between her and a rocky projection on which there was a surface as many feet square. She called to Gaspard to move three feet to the left. He did so, and she called again to him to move two feet farther in the same direction. Then she told him to swing her gently to and fro from the cliff. When directly over the proper place she let go and safely landed on the rock.

Tying the end of the rope around a point of rock, she completed her journey.

It was only after a day and night and another day of such hardihood and daring as was told at the inns and chalets for many a long year that the work was finished.

Even the guides, fired by the example of Marcia and perhaps also by solicitude for the other guides of their party, seemed to be unconscious of fear and hunger and weariness.

When at the end of the second day they reached the foot of the mountain the rescuers were almost as exhausted as the party they had saved, and from the palms of Marcia Wells' hands nearly all the skin had been worn by the rope.

But three days later, although her hands were still bandaged, she said goodby to the rest of the party and started off to begin the new year in quest of another mountain to climb.

A little castor oil rubbed into your boots occasionally will make them last much longer.

MANY OBSTACLES STAND IN WAY OF RECIPROCITY

Conference Which Will Probably be Held in Washington Within the Next Two Months Will Have to Face the Question of Offending Other Nations.

Washington, D.C., April 4.—Within two months, according to the present plans of the administration, there will be a gathering in Washington or Ottawa of representatives of the Canadian and United States Governments for the purpose of negotiating a reciprocity and trade treaty between the two countries.

The felicitous exchanges between Secretary of State Knox and Minister Fielding of Canada, which concluded the recent agreement, contained an implied promise that the effort would be made to reach an understanding on broad lines that might settle for all time the various open issues regarding the land and water boundaries; the fisheries, the preservation of the seals and, finally, the tariff relations.

Most of these matters are of concern purely to the two principals, but the developments in the negotiations relative to the tariff is awaited with the greatest interest by nearly all of the European powers, which may be depended upon to make instant demands for any concessions of special value that may be made by the United States to Canada or vice versa.

As the extension of the concessions to all nations would result in making them practically valueless to the two countries in the negotiations, it begins to appear that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and President Taft will be obliged to devise some strong arguments on which to base a refusal of the concessions to third parties.

The task will be made the more difficult from the reason that the German and French tariff arrangements contains provisions that they shall be terminable within periods of three months, and that they are based upon the understanding that no other country shall be accorded tariff rates lower than those set out in the agreements.

Just how a reciprocity treaty can be framed with Canada that will avoid the objection that it does give Canada preferences is the problem that the tariff expert board will soon have to face.

Traveler Found Dead.

London, Ont., April 4. J. W. Christman, commercial traveler of Hespeler was found dead in his room at the Dominion House yesterday. Death was due to hemorrhage of the stomach.

The Citizens' Committee, of London, will erect the proposed soldiers' monument, and the Daughters of the Empire will take no part.

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

FIRST DIVISION ON THE VETO GIVES ASQUITH LEAD OF 106

Great Britain's Premier Refuses, However, to be Drawn With Regard to His Plans and Advises Questioners to "Wait and See."

London, April 5.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The official opposition amendment to the resolution of the Premier on the veto power of the House of Lords, moved in the House of Commons by Sir Robert Bannatyne Finlay, declaring in favor of a strong and efficient second chamber and expressing willingness to consider proposals for the reform of the Upper House, but declining to proceed with the Government proposals was defeated in the Commons last night by a majority of 106, the House dividing, 357 to 251.

"Wait and see," was Premier Asquith's answer to the inconvenient curiosity of several opposition members, who endeavored to obtain enlightenment regarding the Government's program and of possible alterations in the budget.

Replying to Austen Chamberlain, however, the Premier said he had not authorized Churchill's statement that the budget would be passed without obstruction. This is taken as indicating that some of the objections of Irishmen will be met.

A new phase of the situation is the recognition by irritated Liberals that Redmond's desire to keep a grip on the budget is inspired, not merely by hostility to the Lords, but by his distrust of the Government, but for what will finally happen the country must wait and see.

The debate on the Premier's motion to go to a committee to consider his proposals on disabling the Lords was concluded last night. Right Hon. M. Lyttelton, who opened, warmly protested against Churchill's statement last week that the Lords, having used to the veto to "affront the prerogative of the crown," and invade the rights of the Commons, it had become necessary for the "crown and Commons" to act together and restore the balance of constitution, he described it as "ungenerous and unseemly."

SCENE AT ROCK ISLAND WRECK NEAR GREEN MOUNTAIN, IOWA, WHERE FORTY-FIVE WERE KILLED.

In the wreck of a Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific passenger train, near Green Mountain, Iowa, several days ago, forty-five persons were killed and as many injured. The train, which was a consolidation of No. 19 from Chicago and No. 21 from St. Louis, bound for Minneapolis, Minn., was being detoured over the tracks of the Chicago Great Western road. While running at a thirty mile an hour clip the head locomotive struck an embankment of clay. A second locomotive just behind the first rolled over and the sudden stop crushed the trailer cars together. The above photograph was taken a few hours after the accident.

SIR WILFRID SAYS HE SEES WHY THERE IS OPPOSITION TO LONG SAULT POWER SCHEME

It is Because Ontario Does Not Want Competition in the Electric Business, He Declares—Pardee Fights Any Delay in Putting His Measure Through.

Ottawa, April 5.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a discovery last night, he affirmed at 11.30 p.m., in adjourning the evening's debate on the bill of the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Co. This is the bill which caused the all-night session of Parliament three weeks ago.

Major Sharpe (North Ontario) had pointed out that no Board of Trade or public body of any weight had supported the bill—rather were they opposed to it. Besides, the lines of transmission which it was proposed to charter would duplicate the Ontario Government's Hydro-Electric line.

Thereupon, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in a two-minute speech, declared that the cat was out of the bag. He had been wondering, with others, the real reason for the determined opposition to the bill, and Major Sharpe had revealed it. It was simply that the members did not want any competition with the Hydro Electric. The Hydro Electric was built to compete with the other line, but the opposition did not want this line, that competed with other lines, to have competition.

"I am glad that people now know the real reason for this opposition," he concluded.

When the Deputy Speaker read over the first clause of the bill last evening, Col. Sam Hughes asked that the bill stand over for a week, to allow further study. F. F. Pardee, chief Liberal whip, and sponsor for the bill, said he saw no need of delay, but Col. Hughes insisted that there were developments since the notice had been given by Mr. Pardee of an amendment to the effect that the company can only transmit power already developed.

Richard Blain of Peel asked the Premier if there had been any correspondence with the Ontario Government on this bill.

The Premier answered that there was not, so far as he knew. He denied that the Government had any connection with the bill, and was quite indifferent as to its fate. For his part, he quite shared the apprehension which was entertained, though he did not see that it came into this bill, that in some way or other the object of the promoters was to take a step forward in the legislation which was adopted years ago in regard to the damming of the St. Lawrence. He had no hesitation in saying that, for his part, he would not agree to such a scheme at present. When the present bill was introduced there were perhaps features which might have led the public to conclude that there was something onerous behind it. However, he thought that it had been shorn of all possible mischief, and that it might safely pass the House.

Dr. Reed of Grenville saw no great rush for the bill now. The only thing the promoters could want it through for was to supply Prescott and Brockville.

Hon. George P. Graham supported the bill. If it had anything to do with a dam, he would hesitate to support it, he said, but the bill had nothing directly or indirectly to do with damming the St. Lawrence.

Dr. Sproule: Did they ever ask for power from the Hydro-Electric Commission?

Mr. Graham: Yes. They asked for bread and got a stone.

J. G. Turriff (Assiniboia) said he was not still sure there was not a nigger in the fence.

R. L. Borden moved the following amendment: "That the governor-in-council shall not give his approval to the constructions of any further canals, watercourses, raceways, dams, wing dams, sluices, conduits or other works on the River St. Lawrence to the St. Lawrence Power Co., Ltd., until the plans thereof shall have been first submitted and approved by Parliament.

W. B. Northrup asked why the St. Lawrence Power Co. should not transmit its own electricity. He pointed out that in 1901, when the auditor-general objected to payments in connection with that bill, and took legal advice, Mr. Aylesworth supported him.

W. S. Middlebro (North Grey) condemned the bill as nothing more than a measure of supplement of powers of the bill of 1901.

Hon. Mr. Emmerson thought the objections to the original bill were pretty well removed by the amendment.

The bill will be taken up again this evening for an hour.

The House met at 11 o'clock yesterday morning and proceeded without delay to take up private bills. The Restigouche Boom Co.'s bill, the New Brunswick enterprise, was put through after some discussion, as were the Northern Empire Railway Co. bill, and the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Co. bill.

In the House yesterday Hon. W. S. Fielding's resolution was passed, declaring "That the standard for gold coins of the currency of Canada be such that of one-thousand parts by weight, nine hundred shall be of fine gold and one hundred of alloy; and the standard for silver coin shall be such that of one thousand parts by weight, nine hundred and twenty-five shall be of fine silver and seventy-five of alloy; that the standard weight of gold coin of the denomination of 10 cents be 180 grains and for other gold coins and silver coins proportionate weights respectively."

Hon. Wm. Pugsley's bill to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act was considered in committee yesterday. The object is to prevent the erection of dams, bridges, etc., across navigable waters until the plans are approved by the governor-in-council.

Mr. Borden suggested that the clause should read, "to prevent the erection of dams, bridges, etc., across navigable waters so as to interfere with navigation." This would do away with the expense of preparing plans when only a small wharf is to be built.

James Arthurs, Parry Sound, wanted an exception made in the case of small wharves at summer resorts owing to the expense of plans. Mr. Pugsley will consider.

HE MAY STOP THE GRAFTING INVESTIGATION

Pittsburg, Pa., April 5. William J. Brennan, an attorney representing several councilmen whose cases were called for trial yesterday, set up a legal obstacle in the path of the graft searchers which may halt proceedings.

Brennan moved that the 91 indictments be quashed, on the ground that the foreman of the grand jury, Harrison Neabit, president of the Bank of Pittsburg, N.A., is not an elector of Allegheny County, and therefore not eligible to serve as foreman of the indicting jury.

Brennan also submitted a number of newspapers to substantiate his contention that it was impossible to obtain a fair trial here. He asked for a change of venue. Both points were held up until to-day for decision.

THE WOMAN SHOT IN SELF-DEFENCE

Rochester, N.Y., April 5.—A special from Hornell says: That Mrs. Dell Allen did not shoot her husband and little son in cold blood or in an insane passion on Sunday is evident. Coroner Williamson yesterday said that the woman acted in self-defence. One shot went wild and struck her little boy, Lloyd.

Mrs. Allen says that her husband deserted her last September, and that since then he had been trying to get the children away from her. On Saturday another child was born to her, and Saturday afternoon her husband came to the house and started to take the older children away. Mrs. Allen declares that her husband attacked her with a razor and that she drew the revolver from under her pillow, and fired.

She is only 36 years of age, but has given birth to twelve children, since her marriage to Allen some eighteen years ago. Ten of whom are still living. The family was well-to-do and prominent in society.

THE ITINERARY OF HALLEY'S COMET

Ottawa, April 5.—John S. Plaskett, chief observer at the Dominion Observatory, Ottawa, and a graduate of the University of Toronto, says, regarding the comet:

"Halley's Comet is now west of the sun, and may be seen probably with a field glass before sunrise. I have no doubt that in a week or so it should be visible to the naked eye in the east before sunrise, but will probably not be very conspicuous until about May 20, when it will be in the evening sky after sunset."

TORONTO WOMAN SUFFOCATED IN RAG SHOP CONFLAGRATION

Toronto, April 5. Lying lifeless between two paper presses in a corner of the burning rag shop of E. Pullan at West Adelaide and Maude streets, the body of Mrs. A. Barker, 177 West Richmond street, a paper sorter, was found where she had succumbed to suffocation yesterday afternoon. She was taken to the morgue.

When the first alarm of fire was given, Mrs. Barker, Miss Irwin and Mrs. Miller were working in the rear of the shop, directly above the place where the fire is supposed to have started. They hurried to the stairs, as did twenty men, who were also working on the same floor. Just as the two women ran down Mrs. Barker exclaimed she had left her coat and some clothes behind. She turned to go back for them and was never again seen alive.

It is thought that she became confused by the dense smoke, which quickly filled the building, for, although the stairs were within a few feet of where she was working, she apparently ran to the front of the factory, over a hundred feet, in an attempt to break open the window there. In doing this she forgot the hole in the floor used to feed the paper presses and fell through on to the press in the next storey.

From there the unfortunate woman rolled to the floor, and lay between two presses until discovered some fifteen minutes later. The firemen did not receive any word of there being any one in the place until they had been working at the fire for about six or seven minutes. When it was reported that she was missing, two firemen with great difficulty entered and after a long, trying search brought out her lifeless body.

CARDINAL MERRY DEL VAL TELLS OF ROOSEVELT EPISODE

Rome, April 5. Now that Roosevelt has made public documents which the Vatican considered confidential, Cardinal Merry del Val, papal secretary of state, wishes the entire history of the negotiations for the audience which the former President sought of Pope Pius X. to be known.

Following the exchanges between Mgr. Kennedy and American Ambassador Leishman and Roosevelt's decision not to be received under the terms imposed, John Callen O'Loughlin, who was assistant secretary of state in 1900, and a personal friend of Roosevelt, called upon the cardinal, bearing an introduction from Mgr. Falconio, apostolic delegate in the United States.

O'Loughlin said: "I do not come in the name of Mr. Roosevelt, but on my own account, as an American Catholic." The cardinal said: "Then what are we here for? It is useless to discuss the matter. If you do not represent Mr. Roosevelt, you cannot make any arrangements or speak for him."

Mr. O'Loughlin replied: "That I consider important is to tell your eminence that if the two despatches sent by Mgr. Kennedy are retracted, I can assure you that Mr. Roosevelt will accept an audience."

Cardinal Merry del Val said: "I will not discuss Mr. Roosevelt's rights, but give me confidential assurance that, de facto, Mr. Roosevelt will not go to the Methodists and the audience will occur.

"Mr. Roosevelt is free to go to the Methodists and do whatever he chooses, but the pontiff is certainly free not to receive a man who would claim the right to insult him on the day after having been received by him, or perhaps on the same day as, according to your statement, he may leave Rome on the same day of the papal audience, thus having only between noon and evening Tuesday in which to see the Methodists."

Roosevelt Helps Secularists.

Paris, April 5. Nowhere in Europe has the failure of the Pope to grant an audience to Mr. Roosevelt created greater interest than in France on account of the long separation fight, and it is expected to prove a strong card for the Government in the coming elections, as supporting the contention of M. Briand, the Premier, that the recent agitation of the French episcopate was inspired by the present intransigeant and intolerant attitude of the Vatican.

CANAL WILL BE NECESSITY SOON

Ottawa, April 5. "Sooner or later," declared Louis Coste of the International Waterways Commission, before a sub-committee on the Conmee bill yesterday, "Canada will demand the construction of a canal from Lake Superior right through to Edmonton. If such a canal is not built in the course of time, I believe Canada will lose the grain-carrying trade of the country."

Mr. Coste was giving evidence on the bill to incorporate a company to build a canal from Lake Superior to Lake Winnipeg. It would be possible, he said, to build a canal along the proposed route forty feet wide and containing seven feet of water.

EASTERN ONTARIO NOW HAS DOG SCARE

Brockville, April 5. There is a prevailing feeling here that rabies has spread to this eastern section of Ontario. Nearly a score of people have been bitten in Brockville recently. Brockville's taxation this year will be 28 mills, a jump of two mills.

Last Friday William Hall, married, 50 years of age, left Madrid, N.Y., and the same day Miss Hattie Wilson, aged 30, also vanished. They met at Ogdensburg, N.Y., Friday night, and crossing the river Saturday came to Brockville, registering as George Stone and wife of Utica, N.Y. Provincial Constable Stone of Prescott and an Ogdensburg lawyer named Jamieson were not long in getting sufficient evidence to start a divorce suit.

This new model airship will be fitted with floats inflated with air or gas, and attempts will be made to rise into the air from the surface of the water.

The laboratory has been closed for the present, as Dr. and Mrs. Graham Bell will sail from Vancouver for Australia and New Zealand on May 30. From thence they will proceed to China and India.

The trip will occupy a year.

A Link Between East and West

A remarkable example of the advantages of making reliable goods is to be found in the demand which comes from the great Canadian West for the pure wool tweeds made by the Hewsons of Nova Scotia. So many people have gone West from Eastern homes where the name "Hewson" stands for all that is best in cloth and knitted goods, that the call comes back for the goods 'strong, comfortable woollens that the boys used to wear "at home."

THE RAILWAYS MAY HELP US

Both the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railway Companies now have industrial commissioners, whose duty it is to induce manufacturing industries to locate along their railway lines in order to build up traffic for them.

Mr. D. McNicoll, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, yesterday issued a circular announcing that Mr. H. P. Timmerman, the industrial commissioner for the Atlantic division, has had his jurisdiction extended over the Ontario division.

It is stated that during the comparatively short time that Mr. Timmerman has been industrial commissioner of the Canadian Pacific for New Brunswick, he has succeeded in attracting considerable capital for the development of the natural resources of that province.

Why should not the City Council and the Board of Trade of Peterborough get into touch at once with the industrial commissioners of both the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railways? The development of manufacturing industries in Peterborough will make traffic for both railways. The railway industrial commissioners should be invited to visit Peterborough.

It should be noted, however, that if they come to investigate it will not create a very favorable impression if they are told that the new works of the Canadian General Electric Company are to be in Toronto.

On the other hand, if they should see the new works in course of erection in Peterborough they will come to the conclusion that Peterborough is an enterprising, progressive town and likely to become an important manufacturing centre.

MR. BORDEN'S LEADERSHIP

The little insurrection in the Conservative party at Ottawa has had one good effect. It has shown that the great majority of the party are sincerely and strongly attached to their leader Robert L. Borden and that he has the respect of the whole Canadian people. It is doubtful if any other political leader that Canada has ever had has received such high tributes from the leading newspapers of both political parties. It is not to be expected that Liberal newspapers will contain glowing eulogies of the Conservative leader, but there is one thing that all do acknowledge and that is the goodness of the man, his absolute integrity and uprightness. The few Conservatives who have rebelled against his leadership also acknowledge that as a man he is above reproach, honest, truthful, straightforward, fair, kindly. They say that he is personally liked by all who know him. They admit also that he is one of the greatest lawyers in Canada, that he is logical, forceful and clear in his speeches. But they say he is not a successful leader, not aggressive enough in fighting the government on every occasion, and that he lacks the picturesque, graceful, personality of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

The strong expressions of loyalty to Mr. Borden which have been called forth by these attacks will probably convince the critics that he actually has the quality of leadership, which they thought he lacked, the ability to excite the enthusiasm of his followers.

The weakness of the opposition to Mr. Borden is now revealed. It must be apparent to everyone that he has the full confidence of all the best elements of the Conservative party and there will be no more talk of a change of leadership.

AN INVITATION TO BOSTON

Mayor John Fitzgerald, of Boston, has conceived a great scheme. He proposes that the city of Boston, the Boston Chamber of Commerce and Governor Draper, of Massachusetts, shall unite in sending an invitation to the Governor-General of Canada, the mayors of Canadian cities and leading business men of Canada to go to Boston to celebrate the avoidance of tariff war between Canada and the United States and endeavor to bring about closer commercial intercourse.

The mayor of Boston is quite frank in expressing the object he has in view. "I need not remind you," he says, "of the desire long entertained by our business organizations of making Boston ultimately the chief seaport, not only of New England, but of the great and growing territory lying to the northwest. You are also familiar with the fact that both English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians have immigrated here in large numbers and have contributed largely to the development of our industries and to our general prosperity."

What will the mayors of Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax have to say about this Boston ambition to be the chief seaport for Canada? If such a gathering should come about the Canadians who visit Boston on that occasion should make it plain that we wish to build up our own seaports that if Bostonians wish to profit by the wonderful development of Canada during the twentieth century they must come over to Canadian cities. The mayors of Canadian cities who go to Boston should in fact issue an invitation to the many capitalists of that city to invest their money in manufacturing industries in Canada.

It is true that many Canadians have emigrated to Boston and other large American cities because they have not found opportunities at home. If the many millions of dollars which we annually send to American cities to pay for manufactured goods which could be made in Canada were retained in our own country, there would be no temptation for Canadians to go to the United States. They would find remunerative employment in our own cities.

Canadian business men should tell the Bostonians that they will strenuously oppose any tariff changes that will have the effect of sending more Canadian money to the United States.

ONE BAD MISTAKE

Is Frequently Made by the Wisest of Peterborough People

It's a serious mistake to neglect backache. Backache is the first symptom of kidney ills. Fatal complications may follow. Booth's Kidney Pills act quickly to overcome kidney ills, do not delay until too late, it may mean Diabetes, Bright's Disease. Read what a Peterborough resident says:—

Mrs. R. Duncan, of 115 McDonnel street, Peterborough, Ont., says:—"Some thirteen years ago I suffered with a severe attack of La Grippe that had until this spring left me in weakened and miserable condition. The kidneys had been disordered through this and became so inactive that doctors had pronounced Bright's Disease and termed my case incurable. My back was very weak and the pains across the kidneys were most excruciating. The urine was highly colored and contained a quantity of whitish sediment. I had become so discouraged through my years of suffering that I had no care for anything. Booth's Kidney Pills were advertised at Madill's Drug Store and I tried them. The first box convinced me of their merits. I used five boxes of the remedy and I have been entirely cured. I am like a new person, well and strong and can sleep through the night and awake refreshed and ready for the day." Sold by dealers. Price 50 cents. The R. T. Booth Co., Ltd., Fort Erie, Ont., sole Canadian agents.

HOW LONG IS A DAY?

Some of the World's Inhabitants Eat 315 Meals During One.

If we should meet a man and he should casually remark that he ate 315 meals yesterday we would doubtless be somewhat astonished at his appetite. Likewise we would feel sorry for the man who said that, having foolishly eaten three eggs with bacon for breakfast, he had no appetite for his Christmas dinner. But maybe the first man was from Spitzbergen, where they have a day three and a half months in length, whereas the poor chap who missed the Christmas feast lived in Finland, at Torena, where Christmas day is something less than three hours long.

On the whole, it would be rather wise if one should undertake to do certain work, to receive so much per day in payment, to understand just where the work is to be done, that one might have to labor eighteen and a half hours at Stockholm, if it happened to be the longest day of the year, or all the time from May 21 to July 22 if at Wardbury, in Norway. In St. Petersburg the longest day is nineteen hours and the shortest five hours. At Torena, Finland, there is a twenty-two hour day. At London and Bremen the longest day is sixteen and a half hours, while at Hamburg and Dantzig there are seventeen hours in the longest day. In Washington the longest day is about fifteen hours.—Exchange

HIS CONUNDRUM.

Propounded in Prose, It Was Answered in Rhyme.

In the olden time before the war, the days so famous for generous hospitality in the south, a brilliant party was assembled at dinner in a beautiful country homestead. Across the table wit flashed back and forth, and the guests began to vie with one another in proposing conundrums.

Mr. Alexander H. Stephens offered one which puzzled the whole company. "What is it that we eat at breakfast and drink at dinner?"

For some time no answer came, and the bright eyes of the southern orator began to sparkle with triumph, when Colonel Johnson, taking up the "Commonplace Book" of the hostess, which lay conveniently by, wrote impromptu upon the flyleaf the following answer:

What is eaten for breakfast and drunken for dinner?
Is it coffee or eggs or butter or meats?
Sure double the stomach of obdurate sinner
Who eats what he drinks and drinks what he eats.

But let us consider. 'Tis surely not butter
Nor coffee nor meats, whether broiled or roast,
Nor boiled eggs nor poached nor fried in a batter.
It must, then, be bread. Ah, yes—when 'tis toast!

Blackburn's Eloquence.

The story is told of Senator Proctor of Vermont in reminiscences by Vice President Stevenson that when invited to go out of the senate chamber just before the day's session began he replied: "Excuse me. I am paired with Blackburn on prayers." When the Rev. Dr. Butler retired from the chaplaincy of the senate Blackburn's speech surpassed all others for ardor and felicity of expression. "The counterpart of the scene that followed his closing words had never been witnessed in legislative assembly. All were in tears. It was even said that venerable senators who had never shed a tear since the ratification of the treaty of Ghent actually sobbed aloud and refused to be comforted. At length, amid silence that could be felt, an adjournment was effected, and the senators passed out to their homes. As he passed the chair Senator Vest in an undertone remarked to the vice president, 'Joe never saw him.'"

A Pot Walloper.

The parliamentary register for 1896 showed that there was then only one pot walloper in all England. One seeing the term for the first time might easily imagine that a pot walloper was a species of ichthyosaurus or some other reptile of a past age. It will be discovered upon inquiry, however, that the term "pot walloper" is literally one who boils a pot and was applied to voters in certain boroughs of England where before the passage of the reform bill of 1832 the qualifications for suffrage was to have boiled (walloped) his own pot in the parish for six months.—London Notes and Queries.

Wonderful Musical Memory.

Sir John Stainer had a wonderful musical memory. It was put to the test once at the Crystal palace when he had to play the organ in the "Messiah" and a folio copy, on which alone he could see the score, was not forthcoming. The conductor was in despair. Sir John cut the knot by a wonderful tour de force, playing the part faultlessly right through and entirely from memory, probably the only time the "Messiah" has been so rendered.—London Standard.

Numismatics.

Nephew (just returned from abroad)—This franc piece, aunt, I got in Paris. Aunt Hepsy—I wish, nephew, you'd fetched home one of them Latin quarters they talk so much about.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Braggart.

"Pa, what is a braggart?"

"He's a man, my son, who is not afraid to express his real opinion of himself."—Boston Transcript.

The great question is not so much what money you have in your pocket as what you will buy with it.—Ruskin.

Butchers.

Prime picked lots of choice finished butchers' cattle are worth nearly as much as exporters; loads of good, $5.25 to $5.50, medium, $5.00 to $5.25; common, $5 to $5.40; cows, $3.50 to $5.25.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, April 4.—(Special)—At the west end market receipts last week were 2275 cattle, 175 sheep and lambs, 1950 hogs and 1375 calves, while the supply this morning consisted of 1025 cattle, 125 sheep and lambs, 1150 hogs and 550 calves. Prices show an advance of 15c to 25c, butchers being generally well cleaned out of their surplus stock of beef. The average quality was of a useful sort, not too heavy, and several carloads were bought for Quebec and Ottawa. Cable advices from Liverpool on Canadian cattle noted an advance of ½c, and in London ½c to ¾c per lb., and there was a demand from local exporters. A few extra choice, heavy steers sold at 6¼c; choice at 6¼c, good at 6c to 6¼c; fairly good at 5½c to 5¾c; fair at 5c to 5½c; medium at 4½c to 4¾c, and common at 3¾c to 4¼c per lb. Heavy bulls sold at 5c; medium weights at 4½c to 4¾c per lb. Hog prices declined 25c to 35c, due to increased receipts and small demand from packers, as consumption has fallen off, due to high prices. There were some deliveries on contracts at $10.75, but sales of selected lots were at $10.40 to $10.50. Supplies of calves are plentiful, and prices have declined considerably. Sales of good to choice stock were made at $4 to $6, and common at $1.50 to $3 each. The market for spring lambs is quiet, at $4 to $8 each. A few small lots of old sheep sold at 5½c to 6c per lb.

Your money back if Purity Flour does not prove entirely satisfactory in the baking.

DON'T simply buy flour from the dollar and cent side of it. Buy high-quality flour. That means PURITY FLOUR. The first little extra cost is more than made up by the extra number of loaves of bread it makes—by the superiority of the bread and pastry in sweetness of flavor and nourishing qualities. Buying Purity Flour is a safe investment. You get large returns, not only on account of Purity's ability to produce more, but because Purity contains the greater nutriment and the vim of a strong hard wheat flour. Food made from Purity Flour gives the consumer health, snap and force, which cannot be gained from the use of the weaker soft wheat flour.

"MORE BREAD AND BETTER BREAD"

PURITY FLOUR

You can buy as little as a 7 pound cotton bag or in 14, 24, 49, and 98 pound sacks. Also in barrels and half-barrels

Purity may cost a little more than some flours but you'll find its more than worth the difference. To be genuine, must bear the Purity trade mark.

The Giant's Strength

...By...

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1903, by Harper & Brothers.

She would have caught him, touched him at the least, but he put up his hand to keep her back. She grasped it, but he tore it from her and pushed her away.

She staggered, regained her footing on the polished floor, staggered again and, recoiling toward the pedestal of the statue, fell. It was an accident, the mere miscalculation of his iron strength, but as she reeled and went down Trafford thrilled with a sense of satisfaction. The very brutality of the act was an assuagement to the pain of his outraged adoration. At the turning of the stairway he glanced down at her as she lay. Let her lie! She was the one being in the world against whose blow he had no power of defense, and she had struck him.

He passed on to his room and rang for his secretary. Two minutes later he was dictating letters on business. It was partly the instinct for work, partly the impulse to seek refuge in the commonplace from this upheaval in his affections. He had not reached the point of considering the situation in its practical light, practical man though he was. All he could think of now, all there was room for in his big intelligence, was the fact that his little girl, the one creature on earth whom he loved with an idolatrous tenderness, had taken a step which, as she must have known beforehand, would create a cruel breach between them. No matter how it turned out now, the fact that she had done it would be there.

She, too, in her room, was thinking in the same strain of him. When he had thrust her from him the action had taken her by surprise. Not even when she fell did she seize its full significance. It was only when she caught his merciless glance as he passed up the stairway that she understood the extent of the indignity he had put upon her.

For a second or two she lay quite still. She pressed her cheek on the cold polished wood, drinking in her humiliation. When she dragged herself up, two hectic spots were blazing on her cheeks, while in her soft eyes there was a light that made them curiously like her father's. As she marched upstairs her head was high and her step firm, with a determination altogether new to her. It came over her then that she could never be again the clinging, dependent Paula Trafford of the past. Whatever she did in the end, she knew that outside herself there would be no stay sure enough to lean on. She must be in future her own guide, her own judge, the arbitrator of her own destiny. She felt like a child putting forth into the night alone. Between leaving her father's door and reaching Roger Winship's there was a dark, unknown road to travel, but she must face it. It was difficult to believe that her father's protecting love would not be there. She was so used to it that to be without it was like being without shelter. Instinctively she yearned to stretch out her hands to him again, but the impulse died in the recollection that he had struck her down.

It was late in the afternoon when Trafford dismissed his secretary and summoned his wife, George and Laura. They filed into his book lined office as children before a master. Mrs. Trafford sat near him, by the desk; George and Laura farther off. Through all the business of the afternoon Trafford's thoughts had been working subconsciously toward the definite step to be taken.

"Now, tell me about this affair," he said briefly. "Tell me everything."

Mrs. Trafford, trembling and gasping, recounted what she knew of the first meeting of Paula and Winship at Monte Carlo and of the progress of their acquaintance.

"I shall never forgive myself, Paul," she sobbed as she brought her statement to an end.

"You never ought to," he said, with the shortness habitual to him in moments of excitement. "You knew, as no one else did, what those people brought on me. You knew how I had to fight them and how, because I beat them, public opinion has hounded me as if I were a criminal. They take me for a heart of brass, indifferent to attack of that sort, but you knew better. And yet you've permitted this."

"Paul, I'm very ill," she pleaded. "Spare me."

"I do spare you. If I didn't spare you I should say much more."

"Aunt Julia is less to blame than I," George broke out, with a touch of indignation in his voice. "It was I who told Paula all about the Winships."

"There was no harm in her knowing that," Trafford said quickly. "There was nothing I wanted to hide. You didn't thrust her into their arms."

"No, but I let her go. I knew she felt that in some way we had wronged them."

"Then, by heaven, she'll learn to the contrary!" Trafford cried, bringing his fist down on the desk.

"I knew she felt that," George went on, "but I laughed at her. I didn't take her seriously. When she talked of giving them a million dollars in restitution I joked about it and told her the easiest way for her to do it was by marrying the fellow."

"Then you were a fool!"

"I know it," George agreed humbly. "I'm only showing that I was more to blame than Aunt Julia."

"I don't see anything to be gained, George," Laura said in her most mildly reasonable tone, "by trying to apportion out degrees of blame where perhaps there is no blame at all. Paula is of age and independent. She's her own mistress in every sense. Neither you nor I had any control over her, and Aunt Julia very little. It was Uncle Trafford's wish. That's the way he's brought her up."

"I trusted her," Trafford broke in savagely.

"Naturally," Laura agreed. "So did we. I should trust her again. I must tell you, Uncle Trafford, dear, that it was I who sent Paula to have that portrait done."

"Oh, you did, did you? Yes, I remember her telling me so. Then all I can say of you is that"—

"You see," Laura pursued calmly, "after the conversation at Monte Carlo, when George told her about the Winships and how they had lost their money, and so on, I could see that she was very much distressed. It was the first time she had ever come face to face with the idea that if one man grows rich it often happens that another must grow poor. Paula is more a child than a woman. It wouldn't be possible for any one to live here on earth and keep a soul more spotless from the things that the rest of us have to know and understand. She isn't a man of business, like you and George. She isn't even a woman of business, like Aunt Trafford and me. There are just three things of which she's capable—love for what's good, pity for what's suffering and pardon for what's wrong."

"That's so," George corroborated strongly.

"Yes, it is," Mrs. Trafford added, with a heavy sigh. "It's true, every word of it, even if I am her mother."

"Look here, Laura," Trafford said coldly, "if your game is to work on my sympathies"—

"Oh, but it isn't. I'm only trying to point out to you the way she reasoned—the way that, with her limitations, she had to reason. She saw that the Winships were poor and that we were rich. She knew they had suffered. She had a confused idea as to how it had come about. I advised her to help them, but to do it on some such lines as you would approve of, Uncle Trafford."

"God!" Trafford ejaculated, with an impatient flinging out of the hands.

"I remembered how good you were to those old Miss Marshalls in Turtonville, Wisconsin"—

"Stop!" Trafford thundered.

"I can't stop, Uncle Trafford. I've got to justify myself. I've got to justify Paula. As far as I can, I've got to justify you. So when you spoke to me about the Miss Marshalls I did all I could to carry out your wish—that is to say, I kept them regularly supplied with work and saw that they were able to earn a comfortable income. I told you about it, and you were pleased. When it came to the similar case of the Winships, what more natural than that I should follow the line that you yourself had commended?"

"The situation was different. You should have foreseen the catastrophe."

"How could I, Uncle Trafford? It was no more possible than for you to foresee that old Mr. Marshall would shoot himself."

"How can you!" Mrs. Trafford protested, while George tried to silence his wife with significant looks.

"Go on," Trafford said quietly. He was not the man to let any one see that Laura's shot had carried.

"I suggested the portrait," Laura continued in the same calm tones, "not only as a means of helping the Winships as a matter of generosity, but also to divert Paula's mind from any larger or wilder projects. In that I didn't succeed. I saw all winter that I wasn't succeeding, but I hoped her ideas would die out with time. They haven't. That's perfectly plain. And, since that's the case, I, for one, dear Uncle Trafford, cannot see what good will ever come of fighting her. You can't fight Paula's instinct, not any more than you could fight the spirit of spring. Our worldly weapons have no force against it. You'll excuse me, dear Uncle Trafford, won't you, but if I might advise"—

"You'd give in?" he asked hoarsely.

"I'd humor her. If we'd done that at first, this thing might never have happened. It mayn't be too late now."

"When you say humor her," Trafford demanded slowly, leaning on the desk and fixing Laura with his penetrating stare, "do I understand you to suggest giving a large sum of money to the Winships in what might be called restitution?"

"I mean the large sum of money. I shouldn't care what they called it. It's only the strong who can dare to eat humble pie, and I suggest that we should do it. The money of course is nothing, and for people in our position I should think the interpretation given to the act need count for very little."

"Humph," Trafford snorted, springing to his feet, "just as it counts for very little to a general whether the world looks on him as victorious or defeated. In the eyes of the whole world I should seem to be climbing down. It couldn't be kept quiet. The press would ring with it."

"I shouldn't care for that," Laura responded in her gentlest way, "if it was to save my child."

He stopped abruptly before her, his feet planted apart and his hands thrust deep into his pockets.

"Would it?" he demanded fiercely.

Laura looked up at him with frank eyes.

"I don't know," she replied. "It would depend on how far it's gone. It might. I should even think it probable. At any rate, I should try."

Turning on his heel, he walked to the mantelpiece and stood with his back toward them. When he remained silent they made signs to each other and slipped away.

CHAPTER XIII.

AT dinner Paula wore the black and green dress in which Winship had painted her. The detail was lost on Trafford and George, but Mrs. Trafford and Laura exchanged comprehending glances. Laura managed to call her husband's attention to the fact, but the father saw only that the dark setting brought out the rose tints of the girl's complexion and increased the tlueness of her eyes. She had even hung round her neck the string of pearls which in the portrait she was drawing from the small gold coffer at her side.

The meal passed in some constraint. Trafford ate with his eyes on his plate or crumbled his bread with a nervous movement of his fingers. Mrs. Trafford was too ill to eat at all. She had only appeared at table in the hope, as she said, of "carrying things off." The three others made feeble efforts to talk, Paula avoiding her father's eyes. When her mother rose she escaped again to her room.

"Don't wait for me if you want to join the ladies," Trafford said to his nephew when they had smoked awhile in silence.

George understood the hint and withdrew to the small salon the family were in the habit of using when they spent the evening alone. His aunt and Laura were already there, sitting as if in expectation.

Left to himself, Trafford sat staring vacantly at the flowers and crystal on the table. His cigar went out as his arm fell limply over the back of his chair. He was not thinking actively nor trying to make plans.

"My little girl," he muttered to himself. "I struck her down. It's come to that!"

Again he stared as if without sight and without thought. It was late in the evening when he rose and passed into the salon, where the two ladies and George were sitting in silence. He went straight to the bell and rang it.

"Ask Miss Paula to come here," he said to the servant who appeared.

He took a seat and waited. In a few minutes she came. She stood on the threshold without advancing into the room. He had again the impression that her color was very radiant and her eyes strangely blue. He had another impression, impossible to define—the feeling that his little girl was no longer near him, but gazing at him across some mysterious flood. He waited for her to come into the room. But as she did not he spoke.

"Paula, my child," he began as gently as he could, "since this afternoon I've reflected. You can't be unaware that what you told us in the gallery has been a great blow to me, a great shock."

"I thought so."

"I don't have to tell you that you're all I have. Other fathers love their daughters. I know that, of course. But I don't think many of them do as I love mine. Come into the room, dear. Don't stand away from me. Come and kiss me."

Moving forward very slowly, she bent and kissed him. He drew her to him, and she sank on the floor beside his chair.

"Oh, papa! Oh, papa!" she murmured, throwing her arms about his neck.

"There, there!" he whispered soothingly. "I'm sure we shall understand each other."

She rose again and took a seat. She sat directly facing him, the three others ranged behind his chair.

"I've been trying to comprehend," he began again, "just how it was you felt called upon to take the step you announced to us today. I think I see it. I needn't explain, for I'm sure you follow me. I don't say that you're wholly right. That's something we should both find difficult to discuss. But since you feel as you do I'm ready to go as far as I can to meet you."

She clasped her hands tightly in her lap, looking at him with parted lips and eyes glowing.

"To the young man we saw today," he continued, speaking very deliberately, "I'm ready to give a large sum of money. It shall be as large as you like. I understand there's been some mention made of a million dollars. I should be willing to make it that."

"Oh, papa, how good you are!"

"I should settle it on his sister and him in equal proportions, as I believe the mother is dead. It could be called restoration or restitution or anything else they chose. By the press and the public and the pulpit it would be called conscience money. I should be looked upon as a penitent thief."

She started from her chair with a protesting exclamation, but he waved her back.

"Let me go on, dear. Let me show you how much I'm willing to do for you—I will even say to suffer for you. You've known something in a vague way of the fight I've had to make, but you've seen only the favorable side of it. You've known me as victorious, but you've never known how often I've been wounded. Nobody has. I've kept that as much as possible to myself. I'm looked upon as a man too hard to be hurt by the cannonade of popular hatred and abuse, but it isn't so. I've borne it in silence, and I've lived through it. To a certain extent I've lived it down. The men who couldn't beat me don't hate me less, but I've got beyond reach of their powder; that's all. Now, in what I'm ready to do at your request I should be putting myself again within their range. I should be doing more than that—I should be offering myself as a target. I shouldn't be spared their shots, nor you nor any of us. I told you once that I want my little girl to be protected from that, but of course we should have to let such considerations go."

"But, dear papa, why should any one ever know?"

He smiled faintly, with a shrug of the shoulders.

"You must go to the press to find that out, dear. I'm not in their confidence half as much as they're in mine, and I know something of their secrets too. Within ten days of the transference of property of which we've been speaking the news will be in every paper in the United States. I know, too, just how it will be interpreted. I can't express it better than I have done—that I shall be looked upon as a penitent thief. I shall be abused for the theft and ridiculed for the penitence. I shall be considered as a man whose mind has become enfeebled in his declining years. It will be the end of my career, but"—

Catarrh and Bronchitis

The Bane of Thousands, and has Hitherto Baffled the Skill of Medical Science.

Catarrhozone

Dry air treatment is the one treatment that will cure these diseases.

What stomach medicine has ever been known to cure Catarrh or Bronchitis?

Catarrhozone is not a stomach medicine, but an air medicine, that carries to the remotest parts of the throat, lungs, and air cells little drops of healing so curative that whenever it touches a germ life it kills and eradicates them from the system.

Thousands of doctors and patients have been disappointed by using stomach medicines for coughs and colds. Have you not found it a rather roundabout way to reach the diseased portion of the throat and lungs?

Why not use Catarrhozone, which is breathed to the very root of the disease and heals so quickly and perfectly that every spot is rebuilt with new healthy tissue?

Catarrhozone is the only medicine that will cure. Thousands have testified.

Think for a moment. Is it not sense? Little drops of healing—the air carries them just where disease exists. That is why

Chadwick, the Man Who Passed Worthless Cheques Here Was in Belleville

Belleville Intelligencer: A few days ago the Intelligencer mentioned the case of one Chadwick, the commercial traveller who, at Peterborough, obtained $55 by means of a worthless cheque. This party, it seems, was in this city yesterday, and not only evaded the local police, but left after forgetting to settle his account of $5.50 due for lodging, etc., at Hotel Quinte.

The local police were informed of Chadwick's operation at Peterborough, and were asked to be on the lookout for him, as a warrant had been issued for his arrest. He arrived here on Thursday and registered at Hotel Quinte. Yesterday, after dinner, he went to the G.T.R. station, apparently intending to take the flyer leaving here for the west at 1.40 p.m. The police were notified of his movements and an officer was despatched to the station. Chadwick, it is said, was around the station, and, seeing the officer, concluded that it would be wise on his part to make himself scarce, and did so, disappearing as if by magic. Although various members of the police force were, during the afternoon, making diligent search and enquiries for Chadwick, they were unable to locate him.

MORE WORK AND MORE SALARY

For Medical Health Officer—By-law Defining Duties Passed by Council

A by-law defining the duties of the medical health officer and city physician was passed at the meeting of the City Council last night. Dr. A. W. McPherson is the official, and his salary will be $800 per year, an increase of $200 over last year. His duties have been considerably increased, and the increase in salary is proportionate with the extra work he will be called upon to perform. The M.H.O. under the new by-law, will have to perform the duties of milk inspector, and attend to any of the city's firemen who may be injured in the discharge of his duty.

Ald. Phelan suggested that the medical health officer also examine persons for sanity when ordered to do so by a magistrate, and it was decided to place this in the by-law, but when Dr. McPherson was communicated with and asked if he were agreeable to the extra clause being added, he stated that he would not accept the position with the additional duties suggested by Ald. Phelan. The council then withdrew the clause, the general opinion being that the city was making a good bargain at $800 a year for the work to be done by Dr. McPherson.

A clause in the by-law to the effect that expensive medicines be supplied by the city on the order of the mayor evoked some discussion. Ald. Butler thought that the term "expensive medicines" was too vague and would result in trouble.

Mayor Morrow said that the meaning of the by-law was that in case of an outbreak of smallpox or other contagious disease, such medicine as antitoxine should be supplied by the city.

Ald. Duncan said the fact that such medicine would only be purchased on the order of the mayor was sufficient guarantee for the city.

Ald. Butler—"What does the mayor know about medicines?"

Ald. Phelan and Ald. Hicks were inclined to think that the term "expensive medicines," was not definite enough.

Ald. Hicks suggested that the by-law read that Dr. McPherson supply all ordinary medicines, and the city supply all expensive ones on the order of the mayor. Ald. Hicks moved along this line, and Ald. Duffus seconded it.

Ald. Bradburn thought the clause in the by-law was all right.

The change suggested by Ald. Hicks was made.

Alds. Metheral said the city should have confidence in the medical health officer.

The by-law, with the amendment of Ald. Hicks, was passed.

It should be understood that while the city physician and medical health officer will have charge of the isolation hospital, other doctors may attend cases there, if so desired by patients. Also, that all patients sent there and treated by the city's doctor must pay the city for such treatment if in a position to do so. Purely charity patients are, of course, exempt from payment.

CAME TO HIS DEATH BY ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING

The Verdict of Coroner's Jury in Gilbert Inquest—Witness Said the Trip to the Woods Had Been Previously Arranged, But Was Unable to Say Who Made the Suggestion.

"That the deceased, Ernest Gilbert, came to his death by accidental shooting," was the verdict returned by the coroner's jury at the inquest held this morning in the City Council chamber. It took the jury only ten minutes to decide on this verdict.

Chas. Gilbert, Fred Boord and Ormie Spilsbury, who were with the deceased on Sunday afternoon, March 27th, in Spilsbury's woods, when the rifle, in the hands of Ormie Spilsbury, was discharged, with what afterward proved to be fatal effects to Ernest Gilbert, were called and gave evidence, in which the particulars in connection with the accident were told.

It was Fred Boord who swore that the shooting expedition of Sunday had been planned, but when asked to give the name of the person who made the suggestion, he could not.

Ormie Spilsbury, who carried the gun which was discharged, swore that he did not know whether the hammer was up or down, although he claimed to have had from ten to eleven years' experience with firearms. He stated that he tripped and the gun was discharged. This was followed by a cry from Ernest Gilbert.

Dr. Amys, who with Dr. McPherson, conducted the post mortem examination, was called and read his report. The cause of death was attributed to the damaged condition of the kidneys and bowels and the resulting complications.

Asked for an opinion as to the practice of embalming, by Crown Attorney Wood, Dr. Amys stated that in the case of the present death the body having been embalmed fondlesipad Dr. McPherson and himself considerably, but it would have been much more so if death had been caused by some other means, such as disease or poison.

"It will mean the defeat of justice at some time," was the Crown Attorney's comment.

Charles Gilbert, recalled, said that he had not given any order for the body to be embalmed.

Before the jury retired to deliberate on the evidence, Coroner Gray suggested that they make some recommendation in regard to the practice of embalming in cases of accidental death, but on their return the foreman, Mr. Jas. Snyder, stated that the jury had agreed that the matter was for the medical fraternity to decide.

The jury was composed of Messrs. Jas. Snyder, foreman; Thos. Hooper, R. Denne, Wm. Taylor, R. J. Munro, Jos. Picard, Archie Campbell, F. Clarke, L. Hall, Wm. Grey, Thomas Meredith, W. W. Armstrong, James Fitzsimmons and H. Bagwell.

It is desirable that Peterborough be placed in the forefront, and be made headquarters for Eastern Canada tennis. Will you help?

W. Harold Clayton, President, Peterborough Lawn Tennis Association.

SOME THINGS THE CITY COUNCIL DID LAST NIGHT

All the aldermen were present at the meeting of the City Council last night, and a good deal of routine business was disposed of, as well as several special matters. Mayor Morrow presided. For some reason or other there were an unusually large number of citizens present, and the proceedings were followed with much interest.

A petition from a number of grocers, asking for an early closing by-law was referred to the Legal Committee.

Mrs. Harris, grocer, protested against introducing an early closing by-law.

Richard Ringer applied for the position of caretaker of the new public library. The application was referred to the Property Committee.

G. W. Powell applied for the position of caretaker and assistant librarian of the new library if the positions could be combined. If they could not be combined he applied for the position of caretaker. This application, along with that of Robert Arnold, for the position of caretaker, was referred to the Property Committee.

A BAD STREET.

Mr. Edward Hickey complained that Bethune street, north of Smith street, had been neglected, although the condition of it had been referred to the Board of Works for the past three years.

The Board of Works will look into the matter.

Mr. Hickey also protested against a number of cesspools on the street. He wanted them done away with.

In connection with this matter Mr. Hickey was referred to the Board of Health.

Ald. Phelan said that the portion of Bethune street referred to by Mr. Hickey, from Smith street to Aberdeen avenue, needed attention.

NEW HOSPITAL SUGGESTIONS.

Dr. Gray waited on the council and submitted a sketch of an isolation hospital, which, he said, would only cost the city $1,000, and would be as serviceable as a much more expensive one. Dr. Gray also suggested that the hospital be built near St. Joseph's or Nicholls hospitals, instead of far outside the city limits, as had been proposed. "The hospital, of which I submit a sketch, will be as good as any in the world," said Dr. Gray.

Alds. Butler moved, and Ald. Bradburn seconded, that the sketch of an isolation hospital be referred to the chairman of the Property Committee, and that Dr. Gray be notified when the Property Committee meets—Carried.

Mr. Cecil Williamson asked for a sewer on King street, from the creek west to Aylmer street. Mr. Williamson was informed that the Board of Works had arranged to have the sewer requested advertised in the usual way.

BOARD OF WORKS.

Ald. Hicks presented the report of the Board of Works. Hitherto unpublished portions are as follows:

That repairs be made to the curb of the sidewalk on Brock street between Aylmer and George streets.

That Harvey street at the corner of Dublin street be raised with gravel.

Ald. Butler drew attention to the bad condition of Bolivar street and also to a portion of King street. There was also a bad spot at the corner of Stewart and Townsend street. Surface damage was also needed on Sherbrooke street and at the end of Park street.

Mayor Morrow said the surface drainage was dealt with in the report of Mr. Chipman and Ald. Hicks informed Ald. Butler that the Board of Works would attend to the matters referred to.

Ald. Turner said a wooden sidewalk was in bad shape on Euclid avenue. The sinking of the pavement had also caused a bad spot on Monroe avenue.

WHERE JUDGES' OPINIONS DIFFER

Mr. John E. Belcher, C.E., county engineer, writes to the Review as follows:—In your edition of last Thursday I noticed that Mr. Justice Riddell, in his remarks to the Grand Jury, when receiving their presentment, called attention to the noisy condition of the floor of the court room and expressed the opinion that the architect when making the design must have had that of a theatre in his mind, in the arrangement of the galleries. This reminds me of the old adage that "doctors differ," which possibly may equally be applied to barristers and judges. The deduction I desire to draw, is that when I designed the court room referred to—now some 25 years since—the justice, I think, Morrison—on the opening day of the assizes, enquired of the Sheriff, Mr. James Hall, if the architect was present. He replied yes. I stood up. He then complimented me on providing one of the best, if not the best, arranged court rooms he had met with, being light, airy and having good acoustic properties. He added, however, I might suggest a slight change in having chairs instead of backed bench seats, which were then in place. This suggestion was immediately carried out. I did not sacrifice utility to beauty, as the papers so frequently allege has been the case in other court rooms, to please the eye, but unfortunately little to accommodate the ear.

MUSICAL PEOPLE DELIGHTED

Depredations of Dogs

To the Editor of the Review.

Peterborough, April 4th.

Dear Sir,—Kindly inform me through the columns of your valuable journal why our Council do not pass a by-law prohibiting all dogs from running at large over our lawns and flower beds. I have valuable young shade trees on my lawn and had to build a wire fence to protect it from their destructive propensities. Surely no one who can see and appreciate our beautiful lawns and flowers during the summer months will object to such a law being passed and enforced.

Thanking you for this space,

Yours truly,

CROXTON.

MADRIGAL CLUB'S SINGING WAS REVELATION TO LARGE AND RESPONSIVE AUDIENCE

Gave an Interesting and Thoroughly Appreciated Concert at Conservatory Hall—Work of the Soloists and Conservatory Orchestra Also Won the Highest Approval.

If the judges in the Earl Grey competition take as enthusiastic a view of the performance of the Madrigal Club as the very large and genuinely delighted audience at the Conservatory Hall did last night, this admirable organization of Peterborough choristers will have, it would appear, a splendid chance in the competition for the trophy. The really excellent work of the Madrigal Club came as a complete revelation to the audience and in the execution of their pretentious and splendidly given numbers the Madrigal Club set up a high standard for Peterborough for future choral ambition and entertainment.

The excellent direction of the club by Mr. Gliddon was evident in all the different movements of all the selections, and the singers responded as one to his intelligent and sympathetic leadership. Mr. Gliddon's splendid control of the vocalists was always noticeable, and whether the entire body sang in concert or the different sections gave their special passages, the effect was always admirable and indicated a comprehensive and artistic understanding by the singers employed to excellent advantage by thorough instruction and masterly direction.

It is quite safe to state that the audience, while they anticipated an enjoyable musical evening, had no expectation of such a superior exposition of the art of choral singing. In the heavier and more forcible passages the vocalism was marked by large melodious volume of tone, and in the softer measures by exquisite grace and delicacy of finish.

The opening number of the club was the old English madrigal, "You Stole My Love." This number is used chiefly as a vehicle to display clear cut and exacting technique and was given with the impetuosity which the spirit of the selection called for and the staccatto was remarkably brilliant and even. The audience was taken by storm and insisted on a repetition of the number. The club's best effort, however, was Dudley Buck's beautifully written and expressive "Ode to Music." Combined with the superb vocalism the interpretative skill shown in this number made its performance practically flawless. The club will sing "Ode to Music" at the Earl Grey competition and the work of the other choral societies will have to be of an especially excellent character if they find greater favor with the judges in their numbers than the Madrigal Club in this magnificent selection. Buck's widely sung choral number demands a range of expression from the finest shading to the most dramatic and thunderous crescendos and climaxes and all the passages were given in an equally effective and musicianly manner. "By Babylon's Wave," (Gounod) the club's other number again showed their splendid conception of the requirements of the highest type of choral performance.

All the numbers were sung unaccompanied and the blending of the voices was of such a character that the singing could not fail to win the approval of even the most critical.

The solo numbers and selections by the Conservatory orchestra supplementary to the Madrigal Club's programme completed one of the most interesting musical evenings ever given in Peterborough.

Miss Edna Pringle sang "The Sand's O' Dee," in charming voice and with perfect enunciation, giving as an encore a pretty little number "Dorothy May." Miss Julia Choate's violin number, Vieuxtempt's "Reverie," was played with a warmth of tone and a skilful technique that won the immediate and sincere approbation of the audience. At the conclusion of her encore selection Miss Choate was presented with a beautiful boquet.

Owing to the fact that she was on the programme for two numbers Miss Lulu McGill, an exceptionally talented piano pupil of Mr. Gliddon, did not respond to the very prolonged applause that greeted her brilliant performance of Liszt's "Rhapsodie Hongoise No. 11," although both for this number and her finely executed playing of Chopin's "Polonaise A Flat," she was called upon to return to the platform to acknowledge the enthusiastic plaudits of the audience.

The Conservatory orchestra played fully up to their usual high standard and their splendid work in their three numbers won them encores on each occasion. Their selections were Wagner's "Tannhauser," "The Farewell of the Gladiators" and "Under the Double Eagle."

The Misses McKee and Sisson played the accompaniments of the evening most artistically.

Owing to her being unavoidably prevented from attending, Miss Kathleen Wallis did not appear on the programme.

Mr. Gliddon thanked the audience for their encouraging appreciation and was very much gratified to see a large and representative attendance.

AFTER MAY 1ST DOGS WILL NOT BE ALLOWED TO RUN AT LARGE IN THE CITY

By-law Passed by City Council After Interesting Discussion—Must be Under Leash, Chain or Strap When in Streets and Other Public Places—A Dog Catcher May be Appointed.

After the first of May dogs will not be allowed to run at large in Peterborough.

This is the decree of the city council, and in order that it may be enforced provision has been made for the appointment of a dog catcher if it is found that the police constables are not able to "cop" the doggies that may be rejoicing in their freedom in the streets of the city or in public places. If a dog is running at large he is liable to be captured, and if not reclaimed before forty-eight hours will be destroyed.

The dog by-law, which is now commonly known as "Ald. Turner's dog by-law," was passed by the city council last night, and the main clauses are as follows:—

"The owner, possessor or harbourner of every dog in the city of Peterborough shall on or before the first day of May, in each year, cause the same to be registered, numbered, described and licensed in the office of the city clerk, and shall cause such dog to wear around its neck a collar, and to which there shall be securely attached and kept attached a tag, to be supplied by the city clerk, and every such owner, possessor or harbourner of a dog shall pay to the City Clerk for the use of the Corporation, on or before the said first day of May in each year, for such license tag and registration the sum of one dollar for each dog, and two dollars for each bitch, and every such license shall expire on the 30th day of April of the year following the issue of same.

"Upon payment of the said fee the City Clerk shall issue to the owner, possessor or harbourner of such dog a license and a numbered metallic tag and shall enter the name of such owner, possessor, or harbourner in a register to be kept for that purpose together with the sum paid and the number of the tag issued, and it shall not be necessary for the clerk in making out the collection roll to enter thereon the names of those assessed for dogs."

"Every person who permits a dog to remain about his house shall be deemed to be the owner, possessor or harbourner of such dog for all the purposes of this by-law."

"No person shall permit a dog owned, possessed or harbourned by him to be in any of the public parks, squares, drives, streets, lanes, alleys or other public places in the city of Peterborough, unless it has around its neck the collar with the tag attached thereto mentioned in the second paragraph of this by-law, and unless such dog is accompanied by and under the control of some competent person by leash, chain or strap attached to its collar, and held by such person—and any such dog found running at large contrary to this provision shall be liable to be captured and disposed of as hereinafter mentioned."

"Any dog running at large contrary to the provisions of this by-law may be captured, killed or otherwise disposed of by any police constable of the said city."

"It shall be the duty of the police constables of the said city, or such person appointed by the council for such purpose, to capture dogs which may be captured under the provisions of this by-law, and to impound them, and the owner or possessor of any such dog may redeem the same if done within forty-eight hours from the time of capture by producing a tag and license for such dog, on paying to the city clerk for the use of the corporation the sum of one dollar for dog, and one dollar for each bitch so impounded, and all dogs captured under the provision of this by-law if not redeemed by the time above mentioned, may be sold at the price mentioned in this by-law for redemption, or at such high price as may be obtained therefor, and the price obtained from such sale shall be paid to the City Clerk for the use of the Corporation and a license tag issued to such purchaserer and all dogs so captured and not so redeemed or sold shall after forty-eight hours from the time of being captured, be destroyed."

"When the owner or possessor of a dog captured as aforesaid produces within forty-eight hours after such capture evidence that prior to the capture of such dog he had complied with the provisions of section 2 thereof, and at the time of such capture he was complying with the provisions of section 5 thereof, he shall be entitled to recover such dog (without payment on proving that he is the owner or possessor of the same."

"Any person unlawfully removing the collar or tag from any such dog, shall be guilt of an offence under this by-law."

The by-law also provides for the destruction or removal from the city of dogs which attack, run after or bark at persons and horses, and for a maximum penalty of $50 for an offence under the by-law.

When the by-law came up in Council, Ald. Turner moved that the license fee of $2 for males and $5 for females. The two dollar part was adopted on motion of Ald. Turner and Ald. Graham and after a good deal of discussion it was decided on motion of Ald. Hicks and Ald. Graham, that the license fee for females be $3. Subsequently when the clause came up about having to have the dog in control on a leash, Ald. Hicks said that it might be well to leave the license fees at the old figures, one and two dollars, if the Council would adopt the clause that dogs must be kept on a leash in public places. The real object of the law was to prevent dogs running at large.

Ald. Bradburn took the same view of the matter.

Ald. Hicks moved that the clause to have a dog in control in public places be adopted and that the license fees be one and two dollars.

Ald. Duffus seconded this and it carried.

Ald. Phelan and Ald. Morgan previously moved that the leash clause be struck out, but the resolution did not carry.

"I've two dogs and I'll look like the dickens going along the street with them at the end of a string," said Ald. Phelan.

Mr. John Sawers, who was present, said he had been greatly annoyed by dogs running at large. They had also dug up his flower beds.

"I've already received an application for the position of dog catcher," said Mayor Morrow.

Ald. Duffus was commissioned to arranged for the capture of dogs running at large with a view of having a dog catcher appointed if it was necessary.

"Let us appoint a dog catcher tonight if one is necessary to enforce the by-law," said Ald. Hicks.

Ald. Morgan charged Ald. Turner with being a faddist in connection with the dog by-law. "If it had not been for the rabies scare we would not have had anything of this kind," he said.

"I brought this matter up last year before there was any rabies scare," replied Ald. Turner.

Ald. Batten remarked that "Mr. Turner's big dog was leading a procession of frolicsome dogs one day.

"Under the by-law we will have to keep him under control the same as other dog owners," said Ald. Turner.

PETERBORO FOOTBALL CLUB HAS BRIGHT PROSPECTS

The result of a meeting held at the Y. M. C. A. last night was the formation of the Peterborough Football Club, with the following officers:—

Patrons and Patronesses—Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Matthews, Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. W. Morley, Dr. and Mrs. H. Wightman.

Hon. Pres.—Dr. Geo. Burnham.

Vice-Pres.—O. E. Sisson.

Sec.-Treas.—W. J. O'Brien.

The manager and captain will be chosen after the team has turned out to practice. It was decided to affiliate with the Midland League and P. Fitzgerald was selected to act as representative on Saturday, to draw up the schedule.

The next meeting of the club will be for general business and will be held during next week and notice of it will appear in due time so that any who are interested to attend.

The present outlook for football in the city this year is very bright as there are at least four teams anxious to get into action. Whether these shall form a district in the Midland League or become a city league will be decided on later, but there is sure to be something doing anyway. Word has just been received from Lindsay that they have a Bankers' football team and wish to get a match on at an early date with a local club.

Are Your Children Puny?

A Suggestive Letter to Parents.

Nature is not often at fault.

Stupidity and thoughtlessness of parents are responsible for many of the half-dead men and women we meet.

Their fathers and mothers did not supply the aid that would have set their body activities into full force to develop vitality and rugged strength.

Mrs. Timothy Bristow writes a letter that should set thousands of parents thinking: "My boy and girl, fourteen and sixteen years old, looked pale and puny. They seemed not to care for play like neighbors' children. They were too effeminate and lacked something I would have liked to see them possess. I don't know what put it into my head, but I gave up making cookies and sweet dishes, and it didn't take me long to see they were eating more of the right kind of food. I just thought I would give them some of my own tonic, 'Ferrozone,' and was delighted with the result. Such an appetite it gave them! They grew fairly fat and had a lovely pink color. I think when such a good tonic as Ferrozone is available there is no excuse for delicate children. Certainly lots of nourishing food, and Ferrozone will give a child a great chance to grow up hearty and strong."

FERROZONE Makes Health.

And Ferrozone is a good tonic for old folks, too—it's full of nutrition and blood-building properties and makes the weak strong very quickly. Try one or two tablets with your meals. Fifty cents per box. Six for $2.50; all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

MR. F. H. BURKE BUYS "LOISIR"

The breeders of the district will be glad to learn that Mr. Frank H. Burke has purchased a pure bred black-grey percheron stallion, "Loisir" from the well known firm of Geo. W. Bowers & Sons, Huntington, Ind.

"Loisir" was imported from France, where he was purchased from one of the largest of French breeders, and is of notable extraction, both on the side of his sire and dam. His sire, "Ermit," is owned by the French government, and was bought by the government at the substantial figure of $7,000.

Mr. Burke, in company with Mr. F. J. Sullivan, a salesman for the firm of Bowers & Son, and through whom the sale was effected, paid a personal visit of inspection to the barns at Huntington before, he purchased "Loisir." The sale of the stallion to Mr. Burke involved a handsome sum.

The St. Lawrence is now clear of ice from Quebec to the Gulf.

Mrs. J. P. Parker, of Stratford, was tied to a stove leg and robbed of $5, by two men who called at the house on Saturday.

CRAWFORD IN KILTS.

The Novelist's Remark When He Saw Himself as a Child.

One of the best known guides in the capitol at Washington used to be Colonel Jasper E. Snow, formerly a Kansas City lawyer, who always sat in Republican conventions and voted for Blaine as long as there was a Blaine to vote for.

He had met Mr. Crawford in Florence, Italy, and when the novelist came to Washington Colonel Snow was the first person who showed him the doors made by the novelist's father, Thomas Crawford.

These are the senate bronze doors on the eastern portico. They represent scenes connected with the Revolution and the founding of the government.

The novelist, who had never seen the doors before, quickly identified his mother and father.

"Yes," said he, "mother used to wear her hair just like that."

Then, gazing at the largest child, a Fauntleroyish figure in kilts, with long, flowing hair, he added speculatively:

"But I wonder if I ever really did look like that."

A DUCK HARD TO KILL.

The Screaming Wallcon Is Something of a Diver Too.

The screaming wallcon is a hard duck to kill. Its hide is very tough and is thickly covered with feathers and down. Besides, the bird is a great diver, one of the kind that used to "dive at the flash" when hunted with the old arm that flashed when fired. It is of very little value for table use, being so tough. The only way to manage it at all is to skin it and parboil it in a big pot with plenty of water. The negroes make capes of wallcon skins.

"They are great ducks for diving," says a well known Tred Avon river progger. "They can dive quicker, go down deeper, remain under water longer and come up farther away than any other duck that frequents our waters. I remember once I succeeded in killing a wallcon, and, being short of game for the table, I determined to cook my bird. I got a negro to skin it, giving him the hide for his trouble. After being cleaned we put it in a great pot full of water and under it kindled a hot fire. After awhile I wanted to see how the cooking of my duck progressed and lifted the top off the boiling pot, but there was so much steam escaping I could not see into the pot and struck a match over it. The blamed wallcon, sir, dived at the flash of the match. It disappeared and has never been seen since."

To Start a Tight Screw.

Lots of folks have tried to remove a stubborn screw from a piece of wood, a screw that won't budge at all, and have in the end given it up as a bad job. Well, if such a thing occurs again don't give it up, don't lose your temper or exert yourself, but try this recipe for removing the screw: Heat a poker red hot and then hold it against the screw head for a little while; wait a few minutes for the screw to cool down, when it will be found that the screw can be removed quite easily with the same screwdriver that just previously would not perform the work. The explanation is quite simple. The red hot poker heats the screw, and the screw expands and makes the hole it is in just a wee bit bigger. The screw then cools down and resumes its original size, leaving the hole in the wood a size too large—and there you are.

Interesting For the Husband.

A titled lady warned her new gardener that her husband had an irritating habit of disparaging everything he saw in the greenhouse and of ordering in a reckless manner new plants to be bought.

"But on no account humor him," she said. "Whatever he says, throw cold water on him or he will ruin us with his extravagance."

At this point the new gardener turned on her a white and startled face.

"Ma'am," he said, "if he orders me to pitch every plant in the place on the rubbish heap I shan't ever have the pluck to douse him in cold water. Won't it do as well if I get a drain of warm water out of the boiler and let it trickle gently down his back?"—London Tit-Bits.

Very Thoughtful.

"Before we were married," said Mr. Meekton, "I showed my affection for Henrietta by serenading her."

"I suppose you neglect any such attentions now."

"Yes; I show my affection now by respecting her desire that I shall not try to sing."

The Only Way.

"I wish I knew how to keep a servant."

"That man across the way can help you."

"Does he conduct an intelligence office?"

"No; he's an embalmer."—Houston Post.

Limited Experience.

Gentleman (hiring valet)—Then I understand you to have some knowledge of barbering. You've cut hair off and on? Applicant—Off, sir, but never on."—Boston Standard.

THE CLOCK OF FATE.

How a Marriage License Was Taken Out Four Times.

By DELIA TOURTELOTTE.

(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

While looking for evidence of a marriage involving property belonging to clients of mine I came upon a marriage license issued to two parties, and written across the face of the entry in red ink was the note by the judge: "Returned unused. See page so-and-so." On turning to the page referred to there was another record and the same red ink note. In short, the record shows that a license was procured and returned unused three different times. The fourth time, however, was the charm, and they were married, he at the age of forty and she at thirty years.

I made a note of the names, intending to look for the story that appeared to be contained in these several notes. Years afterward I stumbled upon it by accident. It was told to me by a sister of the lady for whom the license was taken out. Here it is:

A social party from the city was husking corn on Berkhart's farm.

Among the husking party were the two persons whose names appear in the marriage record. They were Norman Witridge, at that time aged twenty-five, and Rose Anderson, a slip of a girl, hovering between childhood and womanhood. Witridge was a handsome young fellow, and Rose Anderson was a very pretty girl. Between fifteen and twenty-five, nothing but physical beauty is needed to unite those of opposite sex. The two were sitting on a heap of corn busily tearing off the husks when they saw each other for the first time.

Witridge husked a red ear.

Every one who knows anything about husking parties is aware that when a fellow finds a red ear he is entitled to kiss the girl he happens to be nearest. Witridge had noticed the vermilion lips of Rose Anderson, and, hungry for a kiss, he was eagerly watching for the red ear that would give him one. The moment he saw the dark kernels he took the kiss, and it seemed to him that he was in heaven.

SHE TURNED AWAY FROM.

As it needs only one electric spark to send a message around the globe, so with two young people it needs but a kiss to start a home. The couple spent several hours together, at the end of which time Witridge, who had driven to the husking in a buggy, handed the girl into it and drove to town. It was the old story. Swayed by impulse, he had dared her to marry him, and, swayed by impulse, she had taken him up.

On reaching the town Witridge procured a marriage license and took Rose Anderson to a parson for the purpose of marriage. Knowing nothing about the age required to enable a clergyman to legally marry a girl, she replied that she was fifteen. The clergyman declined to perform the ceremony and berated the young man soundly for bringing so young a girl to him to be married. The two went out and stood for a few moments on the sidewalk, the young man irresolute. Then, putting the girl in the buggy, he drove her to her home.

The next day the marriage license was returned unused.

Whether or no Rose Anderson's parents knew of how near their daughter had come to being married I did not learn, but the fact remains that within a week after she went to the parson's she was packed off to boarding school, where she remained, vacations excepted, for three years. During this period she never met the man who had come so near to being her husband.

When the fates have a destined end in view they arrange situations to meet the case. In the first place they knew perfectly well the dispositions of the couple they had decreed should eventually marry. They did not bring them together again in a conventional way. They took care that the next meeting should be calculated in accordance with the impulsive natures of the young couple, especially the girl's. Not only this, they sent Cupid to shoot a few more arrows into their hearts.

Mr. Witridge and Miss Anderson, three years older than they were at the husking, came together for the second time at a straw sleigh ride, and the managers of their destinies arranged that they should sit side by side. Witridge began by apologizing for having ever asked a girl so young as she had been at the time to marry him and ended by saying that he was very sorry she had not been of the required age.

Something, she knew not what, moved the girl to discover whether or no he was bluffing—giving taffy—in short, that to express which no correct English word has ever been coined. She dropped her lids, and he felt for her hand. He found it, and it was not withdrawn. When they separated she had intimated to him that if he would call on her the next afternoon, she would complete what had been intended after the husking party.

The next morning Mr. Witridge took out the marriage license for the second time and in the afternoon called upon Miss Anderson. He found her arrayed for the bridal in a plain walking suit, and they started at once for the clergyman who had declined to marry them before. Miss Anderson went to the very door, but when she saw Mr. Witridge's thumb about to press the button she turned and fled. She had discovered that he was not bluffing, and he had discovered that she was doing that very thing.

For the second time the marriage license was returned. The clock of destiny for those concerned struck 2.

When the couple met for the third time it would not have availed the fates to bring them together that they might act on impulse, for their impulses had faded before maturity. It was twelve years before they met the third time. It is singular that, really loving each other, they should have been separated for so long a period. The reason was that Witridge supposed Miss Anderson had acted from "bluff" alone and pursued the matter no further. Miss Anderson, being now a woman passed out of childhood, would not marry, so to speak, "on a lark." She must be properly wooed and won. The consequence was that they passed all these years under a misunderstanding.

Meanwhile Witridge had become an active business man. He grew wealthy, or was considered so, belonged to a number of select clubs and went somewhat in society. One evening at a social function he met Miss Anderson, now a woman of thirty, not yet past the line between youth and middle age. The moment the two got together the smouldering fire within began to show flame. Something the lady said induced her lover to believe that he had made a mistake. The next day he called, and the next week they were engaged to be married.

It was about this time that a financial panic occurred, and while it was coming on arrangements were being made for the wedding.

One day, two months after the engagement had been announced, Witridge went to the office where marriage licenses are procured and called for the license that had been twice returned. The clock of fate struck 3.

The wedding day was bright and beautiful, and it seemed that the long unused marriage license would serve its purpose. But the fates had not yet finished their work. On entering his carriage to go to the church Mr. Witridge was arrested on a criminal charge of misappropriation of funds. He had for some time, like many others, been struggling against a want of ready money in business and was considered rather "shaky" by some of his creditors. One of them, fearing that he was about to fail, took this method on the eve of the debtor's marriage to force an immediate payment of his claim. Witridge was unable to meet his demands and instead of going to the bridal went to jail. The act of this creditor brought about Witridge's failure, and as soon as the former found that his attempt to force his debtor had failed he withdrew the charge, and Witridge went forth a free but ruined man.

Miss Anderson is now a woman, and it is time, if ever, that she shall show whether she is the same impulsive creature as ever or has grown cold with increasing years. She sent a note to the man who had been so ruthlessly torn away from her saying that she believed he would clear himself of the charge and he could count on her if he did.

When Miss Anderson saw her lover again he was much changed. He looked fifty instead of forty and was discouraged. He had no income on which to support a wife, he had no capital with which to embark again in business, and he felt that his good name had been smirched. Miss Anderson had sent word asking him when he left the jail to come at once to her. When Witridge entered the drawing room at her home he encountered a pair of arms that were thrown violently around his neck, and his face was covered with kisses. Then the two sat down together, and she said to him:

"I have some property, as you know, and have turned it all into cash, realizing $18,000. Here is a check for the amount to your order. It is not much to start in business with, but you have a host of friends, and that is capital in itself. You must begin tomorrow."

A light rose in his melancholy eyes as he said:

"You are the same girl you were at the husking. 'Bray a fool in a mortar'"—

"And she will be the same girl that tried to bluff you when we went to be married the second time," she finished.

"If it hadn't been for both our impulses we might have been happy together long ago," he said, with a sigh.

"And if it hadn't been for my impulses now I might leave you to a frightful old age. Go at once and get that ancient marriage license."

And the same day the clock of fate struck 4.

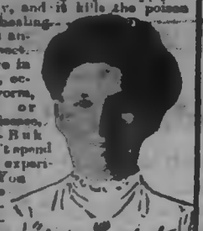
$&C ASPECT OF ZAM-BUK

Zam-Buk spells saving to you! Suppose husband, wife or some member of the family sustains a cut or a bad scratch, which festers or turns to blood-poisoning. Result—off work! What does that mean at pay-day? Zam-Buk prevents wounds, cuts or injuries "turning the wrong way." Apply it immediately, and it kills the poison and starts healing.



There is another aspect. If you have in the family, eczema, ringworm, ulceration, or any skin disease, try Zam-Buk first—don't spend money on experimenting! You will have to get Zam-Buk eventually. Do it now; and save cost of the other things. Hear these persons:—

"I proved its value!"

Mr. A. M. Brooks, Wellington Street, Steelton, Ont., says:—"If only I had got Zam-Buk at first, it would have saved me scores of dollars; as well as hours of agony." Mr. Brooks has been cured of eczema. He says:—"My neck, chest and body were covered with the terrible disease. The itching, burning and smarting I suffered, none who has not gone through it can tell! Doctors' lotions, salves and prescriptions didn't do me a bit of good; and from one thing to another I passed, only to find them useless. With Zam-Buk it was different, and without going through a long story, I can say that a few weeks' treatment with this great healing balm healed the sores, and rid me for good of the terrible eczema, which had held me in its grip for over ten months!"

"If I had applied Zam-Buk in the first place, instead of trying the other preparations, I should have saved myself a lot of money." So says Mrs. E. M. Bedwell, of 237 Provencher Ave., St. Boniface, Winnipeg. Mrs. Bedwell had a cut finger, which became poisoned. She says:—"It became swollen and discoloured, and my whole arm ached and throbbed violently. I called in a doctor and he lanced it. You may imagine how I suffered, and despite the doctor's treatment the finger grew festered, and got so bad that the doctor advised me to go into the hospital. I feared, if I did, they would cut it off, so refused. One day we were advised to try Zam-Buk. We left off everything else and gave this balm a trial. Well, it only took about four days to draw out the soreness! Then, bit by bit, it began to heal, and in less than three weeks from first applying the Zam-Buk the finger was healed and perfectly healthy. If only I had got Zam-Buk at first!"

All skin injuries and diseases are cured by Zam-Buk. Eczema, eruptions, pimples, ulcers, piles, inflamed patches, cuts, burns, scalp sores, chaps, etc., cannot resist its healing virtue. 50c. box, all druggists and stores, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Refuse all imitations.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

The majority of women in France are wage earners in one capacity or another. The average sum paid to dressmakers is 3 francs, or 60 cents, a day.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cochran Seaman, better known as Nelly Bly, the globe girdler, is now the manager of the Ironclad works of Brooklyn, a concern which employs many hands.

Mrs. Rosa Herrman is president of the H. Herrman Lumber and Furniture company, an American concern, which has branch offices in London, Hamburg and Natal. Mrs. Herrman lives in Stuyvesant square, New York.

Mrs. William Salter has been elected a member of the London county council. She is the wife of a physician who was defeated a few days ago for parliament. Mrs. Salter made a house to house canvass, and she credits her election to the support of women. She was opposed by two men, and she topped their combined vote. The chief planks in her platform were lower rents and lower taxes, two things which appealed especially to the women in the district she now will represent in the council.

Lady Duff-Gordon is a warm admirer of the American woman. This member of the British nobility claims that an American woman can keep a secret. She says that in America women are treated on equal terms with men. "They are better educated than Englishwomen, as a rule. There is no country where woman is treated with greater courtesy. The result is seen in the independence of character and the self reliance and dependability of the American woman."

SPRING FASHIONS for STREET FROCKS

THE first balmy, sunshine filled days of early spring may turn the thoughts of the country girl to spring flowers and new life, as evinced in the slowly opening buds on the trees and shrubs all about her, but for the city bred girl springtime must be ushered in through thoughts of new gowns and the attractive contrast of flower and ribbon instead of fur and velvet decked hats.

In this climate spring invariably arrives unawares, for after a preliminary spell of warm days late in February a brief return to wintry cold is almost sure to follow, so chill and unpleasant that all thoughts of anything save fur lined garments are put away. This is an unkind trick to play upon poor woman, for the equally sudden return of seasonable heat always finds her unprepared. Wise indeed is the girl who occupies the first Lenten weeks in preparing the spring outfits for school and afternoon wear.

It is obligatory that the school girl has her spring trousseau ready for the first demands, for, saving the brief holiday week, she has little time for fittings. Yet she wears her gowns more regularly and constantly during her school days than at any other time in her life. If the "best" winter coat and skirt costume is to be turned over to everyday wear for the spring, now is the time to have the interlining taken out, new silk collar and cuffs added, the whole suit pressed and cleaned and the thin foulard or crepe de chine waist made for it in place of the heavy cloth worn during the winter. If there is to be a new coat and skirt costume for school wear, the sooner it is begun the better.

There has been a tendency during the last few years to do away with the time honored custom of putting off until Easter Day the donning of the spring outfit. Straw hats are nowadays pretty generally worn by the last week in March, and the new gowns appear just as soon as the weather will permit. The almost unprecedented early date of Easter this year will not, therefore, cause any conspicuous difference in the time of appearance of new spring clothes.

ALWAYS the first consideration of a season's outfit is the street costume, and a smart coat and skirt of medium weight serge or broadcloth is the most necessary part of the spring trousseau for all ages. Coats and skirts of the same material are now made up for even very little girls, who have the skirt finished with suspender straps or gimpe effect and coat fashioned on loose jacket or reefer lines, but long enough almost to cover the entire skirt—and possible to wear occasionally as a separate cloak.

Even for the youngest girls it is worth while to provide a fairly expensive tailor costume, for an absolutely plain coat and skirt do not go out of fashion, and they receive such hard and constant wear that a good quality of material is necessary. No texture is so good at this time of year as a medium weight serge, unless it be, perhaps, a fine quality of light cheviot. It is a mistake for the spring suit to be too light, for the average April and May weather is either quite raw, demanding warmth in the street dress, or else so hot that any cloth is uncomfortable. As this costume will be the travelling suit for the summer as well as the gown which receives hardest usage during the first part of the autumn, it must certainly not be of too thin a texture. There is a return this year to the plain weaves of serge, although all the fancy stripes and ribbed effects are still in evidence.

FOR the girl to whom blue is becoming there is no suit so satisfactory as a smart, simply made coat and skirt of dark blue serge. Relieved by touches of light blue or white on the revers and cuffs and in the hat the color can be made appropriate for almost any afternoon use, and then when it is desired to put it into hard wear later on no shade is less tiresome to wear nor more serviceable for all manner of occasions. The different tones of gray take the place of blue when that color is unbecoming, and gray in all tones, from dark-est London smoke to palest silver shade, is decidedly one of the season's colors. Bright colors may be introduced in the hat, but for the coat of a gray costume white flannel or palest gray on a deeper tone is more youthful and always more attractive than when any contrast is introduced.

The jackets of the present season are once again made semi-fitted back and front, sleeves small but not absolutely tight, are double breasted, a good three-quarter in length—this is the ever favorite tailor coat, which remains in fashion with but small alterations season after season, year in and year out. There are always, of course, elaborate models introduced, these designs this year taking the form of Russian blouses of all possible lengths and varieties. It requires a slender figure to look well in a Russian blouse, so that naturally this fashion has already found special favor among all arbiters of young girls' costumes. Some-few of these jackets are quite long, but the majority reach just a little below the hips with the fancy belt designating the natural line of the waist. Embroidered collar, revers and cuffs and perhaps fancy buttons all help to make of a Russian blouse an elaborate style of dress suitable for afternoon wear.

Skirts are quite different this year from last in that they are decidedly full, and to describe the different varieties of plaited and gored models would require many columns. For young girls the deep yoke with plaited flounce added just at the knees is still a favorite design, and while there are plain, circular and also flaring, many-gored skirts to be seen, plaited skirts are more becoming and are therefore more in favor. Separate stitched belts of the material have made their appearance again, but the skirt fitted about the waist to a band of stiff boned belting and finished off without a belt is still smart. The belting is quite narrow, though, being seldom seen more than one and a half or two inches wide, instead of the three and four inch belting formerly made use of.

DARK linings the color of the cloth or a few tones lighter, but of the same shade, are used altogether in all jackets, while if there is not a drop skirt attached to the skirt itself then the silk petticoat must be of the right shade for the serge or cloth.

Many spring costumes for young girls show a simple gown of serge made in one piece, with waist lined only with china silk, having a jacket of the same serge to complete the dress. If the very softest and lightest weight serge is employed this gown is not too warm for early spring, but the jacket should have a heavy satin lining to make up for the extremely thin grade of the serge. It would perhaps be more sensible for this gown to be made with bodice and skirt separate, so that when desired a thin white blouse could take the place of the cloth waist. Collar and tiny yoke should be of transparent net or lace, and white cuffs will also make the simple gown more attractive. Throughout the spring a gown of dark blue serge made absolutely plain, with blouse waist and plaited skirt relieved only by lace or lawn collar and cuffs, can be used for street wear with or without a jacket of the same material. A dress of this description is also most useful for the schoolroom.

Among the latest Parisian costumes are the seamless waists and coats, but just what degree of popularity will be accorded this fashion in young girls' frocks remains to be seen. When sleeves and shoulder show no line of demarkation the chest is apt to look contracted, or at any rate too narrow to be attractive, and it calls for a very trim little figure indeed to look really neat and well turned out in this style of dress. For quite little girls, however, all loose, rounded lines are desirable.

FOR afternoon the different voiles are smartest of all materials for young girls, but as these require a silk foundation less expensive and almost equally effective frocks are made up in tussor, rajah, poplin and the many different fabrics of that grade. There is a great wealth of color to choose from in the voiles, the brightest tones of cerise, pink and yellow and the soft shades of apple green and the dark blues being all in favor. Although occasionally a dark colored voile gown will turn out extremely well over a lining of pale shade or white, as a rule the dress will be more effective if made up on the same shade or over a changeable silk lining that will emphasize the bright shade of the voile itself.

There is unquestionably to be a return this summer to the elbow and three-quarter length sleeves, for practically all elaborate spring gowns show an abbreviated sleeve length, but the style of afternoon gown suitable for a young girl will be quite appropriate with full length sleeves should they be preferred. The Dutch neck gown is still also under discussion, many extremely pretty simple gowns being finished at the neck with a soft wide frill of plaited lace and no collar, the three-quarter sleeve having a turned back cuff effect formed of the same three inch frill caught up against the material. This frill finishes off a transparent yoke of lace or tucked chiffon or net.

THIRTEEN THEIR LUCK.

AT a fashionable boarding school near New York the girls have adopted thirteen for a lucky number. The most popular and most sought for bedroom is No. 13, and the tradition is that all the girls who have occupied it in the last ten years have distinguished themselves in one way or another. One has achieved a reputation as a poet; another has married a British earl; another met her matrimonial fate most romantically during a fascinating trip around the world, while another may her father came into high political honors while she was the occupant of No. 13. The girls all groups of thirteen at tables in the dining-room, and at the last examinations of the year the girl who [illegible] thirteen is carried off the lot, as the school [illegible] in that number [illegible]

Fashion Details Every Woman Should Know.

AN interesting model for a spring gown is shown in illustration No. 1. The gown is of light weight cloth trimmed with braiding and borders of fringe. The arrangement of the overdress is one that would probably be becoming to a large number of women because of the fact that the bodice and the overskirt in one piece insures a length of line which is not otherwise readily obtainable with the overskirt.

Crepe de Chine, voile de soie and, later, the summer fabrics, especially foulard and mousseline de soie, will be made up after this model. When the material is on the order of chiffon or mousseline de soie the place of the braiding will be taken by allover lace used either over or under tulle or chiffon. A very charming frock of this sort has already been made up after this model in a peculiar and interesting shade of red voile de soie.

FIG. 1—ATTRACTIVE OVERSKIRT MODEL.

White lace is used in place of the braiding on the skirt, the bodice and the sleeves, and is made to tone in with the gown most frequently by being veiled with thin chiffon in the red of the gown.

RATHER remarkable is the design for a spring coat shown in illustration No. 2. While the coat from which the illustration was drawn was developed in cloth and trimmed with satin, the design is also being used for coats of linen, silk, pongee and crepe de Chine. The model is not only a smart one but it is becoming to a great many figures and will be found to cause less self-distrust to women whose figures are no longer nymph-like than do most of the new models with their continued appeals to slenderness and long lines.

The suit was made of green cloth with black trimmings and buttons of green, black and silver. With the suit was worn a blouse of green crepe de Chine with yoke and collar of écru lace and finished with a full tie and jabot of écru batiste. The hat designed to accompany this costume was of black straw trimmed with a band of black velvet, a large green and black buckle and a peculiar ostrich plume in champagne color.

PRACTICAL APRIL TALK

"BEWARE of getting too fat," cautioned the April Grandmother, looking with critical eyes at the plump proportions of her second granddaughter. "To be exceedingly round at an age when most girls are absolutely angular portends a shapeless figure before the thirtieth anniversary of the birthday has been celebrated.

"While a too generous diet undoubtedly helps to increase the weight of any young girl who is constitutionally inclined to corpulency, the main causes for obesity," the April Grandmother halted abruptly in deference to the expression of horror on her young descendant's face. "For excessive plumpness is the childish habit of eating between meals. A girl of sixteen is still a child in many respects. She has not cut her wisdom teeth or lost her 'sweet tooth,' and therefore her haphazard luncheons are apt to consist of confectionery or hot chocolate and little cakes composed chiefly of sugar—a food product which above all others will most speedily fatten a pair of round cheeks and make coarse a set of delicate features which previously were pretty.

"Insufficient exercise is another cause of flesh accumulation," continued the April Grandmother. "Nearly all young girls are so active that they do consider-able walking in the course of a day, but while those of the slender type trip along as though they were trying to catch a train the fat ones move like snails and stop frequently to rest instead of adopting a rapid and uninterrupted gait. Unlike those of rather delicate physique, plump girls should occasionally allow themselves to get overwearied with walking unless they do not care how soon the waist becomes thick and short, the hips broad and the shoulders sturdy.

"Plump girls sometimes not only become absolutely fat, but lose a great deal of enjoyment simply because their feet are in a chronically aching condition. They cannot comfortably take long walks and they dance so awkwardly that they receive few opportunities to indulge in that graceful exercise. A great many of them might be belles as well as beauties if they would cast aside vanity and wear broad toed and high topped shoes, for the feet of a plump girl require plenty of space and her ankles need to be well supported.

"A too tight corset is nearly always a snare to the plump girl, who is apt to imagine that pinching will reduce the size of the waist. On the contrary, lacing helps tissue to form, for the muscles of the waist must have a chance to exercise freely if they are to become thinner. It is much safer to gradually acquire a reed like figure by allowing these two large muscles to work off their surplus flesh than to do it via corset constriction, which is likely to push the liver from its normal position, and thus play havoc with the general health.

"The line between the conditions of pretty plumpness and superfluous flesh is so fairly," concluded the April Grandmother, "that no schoolgirl of generous outlines should lose sight of it for a single day."

WAVY LOCKS

EVEN the straightest locks in the world can be made wavy by the simple process of wetting the hair with alcohol and pinning it in little loops tight down to the head. Do not put the alcohol on with your hands or brush, but use a little wad of absorbent cotton and dab the alcohol lightly over the hair. Then, taking a strand at a time, pinch it into loops about two inches apart and pin each loop snugly down. This can be done across the back of the head as well as on the top and sides, and the hair will wave and be perfectly dry in about half an hour, especially if a thin piece of veiling is tied all over the head as tightly as possible.

ENAMEL BUCKLES.

CHARMING belt buckles are in enamel, with silver rims or bands.

The blue ones, in different shades, from pale blue to the very dark navy, are particularly charming. Medium shades of blue, with silver rims, are the most useful, as they can be used for more purposes than either the darker or lighter shades. There are also beautiful green enamelled buckles, with the silver rims or markings, and some red, brown and pale pink ones. The blue and green ones seem, however, the most popular. They are oval or rectangular and quite simple in design. There is a broad band of enamel and an outer rim of silver. Some of the buckles are made entirely of the enamel, with narrow bands of silver crossing it at intervals.

BLOWING BOTTLES.

Processes Through Which Even the Most Ordinary Must Go.

Although the oldest bottles known were made of skins, glass bottles containing wine are represented on Egyptian monuments which are more than 4,000 years old, while as early as Pharaoh of the Exodus there were bottles made of bronze, silver, gold, porcelain and alabaster, which from their superior workmanship and elegant design go to prove that even at that period the art of bottle making was by no means in its infancy. The early history of the bottle is somewhat meager, owing no doubt to the fact that the true bottle has never been a thing of much beauty, except in a few rare instances, but rather a humble vessel of no intrinsic value.

Bottles are made to-day in stupendous quantities and are of all sorts, sizes and descriptions. In the manufacture of a common bottle either sand, soap boiler's waste, brick clay or other materials, according to locality, are used. Having been run down into a molten mass, the metal is skimmed, and the first operator, known as the "gatherer," takes a little of the glass on the end of a heated pipe. When this has cooled somewhat he again dips his pipe into the glass, having "gathered" in the two dips sufficient to make a bottle. This he hands on to the "blower," who as he blows through the tube rolls the metal on a stone, thereby fashioning the bottle neck. The roughly-shaped mass is then placed in a mold and the operator continues to blow until he has brought it to the required form. After this the bottle is handed to the finisher, who by touching the neck with a small bit of iron dipped in water completely severs it from the pipe. He attaches the pontee, an iron instrument tipped with molten glass, to the bottom of the bottle and thus gives it the usual rounded shape. This pontee may be used for from twenty to twenty-four dozen bottles. Then, warming the bottle at the furnace, the finisher takes a small quantity of the metal on what is known as a ring iron and, turning it around the mouth, forms the ring seen at the top of the neck. Taking the shears, he trims the neck. In the centre of one blade of the shears is a piece of brass tapering like a cock, which forms the inner mouth, while the other blade has a piece of brass fastened to it, for the purpose of shaping the ring. A boy lifts the completed bottle on a fork, and it is taken to the annealing arch, which contains about ten or twelve gross of bottles placed in bins one above the other. These are the processes which even the cheapest and most ordinary bottle has to go through. So it can well be imagined what an infinitude of care and trouble is needed to produce a bottle of the finest grade.—London Globe.

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

CONSERVATION OFFICIALS NOT ALLOWED TO SPECULATE

J. E. Armstrong Moves Amendment to Act Governing Commission Making it a Punishable Offence to Deal in Properties Under Investigation.

Ottawa, April 6.—The work of the commission for the conservation of national resources was discussed at length in the Commons last evening, when Hon. Sydney Fisher's bill to amend the act authorising that body came up for consideration. The chief amendment was to provide that the annual meeting could be held elsewhere than in Ottawa, and that committee members should have their traveling expenses paid.

J. E. Armstrong (East Lambton) suggested prohibiting members from engaging in private speculation. Mr. Fisher said that would be impossible, preventing them from investing in mining or railway stocks.

Hon. Clifford Sifton argued that members of the commission were above suspicion. If they adopted Mr. Armstrong's suggestion Senator Edwards would be unable to purchase timber lands, and E. B. Osler, M.P., chairman of the public health committee, would have to sell out his shares in the Canadian Pacific Railway. He himself would not retain his office as chairman if there was suspicion that any members would use the special knowledge acquired for their personal benefit. An amendment might, however, be agreed upon to prevent any abuse.

W. F. Maclean (South York) urged that committees of the Commons should have the advantage of the data gathered by the commission. Mr. Sifton admitted that it would be useful, but did not see how it would be wholly workable at present.

Mr. Armstrong moved that no member or person employed by the commission shall purchase or acquire franchises, water powers, mines, lands or timber limits, or acquire any interest in such, or disclose information on matters before the commission, under penalty of $1,000 for each violation. Mr. Sifton still objected that the proposal was unworkable, but eventually Mr. Fisher accepted the amendment as applicable only to officials and employes. The bill stands for third reading.

The House yesterday morning went without incident into a discussion of Hon. Sydney Fisher's bill to amend the Meat and Canned Food Acts. The bill, which is designed to effect improvements in administration, proved to include the word "goats" in its interpretation clause, and David Henderson protested that people in Ontario, at least, have not come down to eating goats' flesh.

Mr. Fisher said that a certain quantity of goats' flesh is consumed in the United States and some of this may be imported; also flocks of goats now are kept for other purposes and some of these might be slaughtered.

In the agricultural and colonization committee C. J. Thornton suggested that a great publicity propoganda be started by the agricultural and colonization committee, which would tempt town dwellers to adopt rural life. Town people, he said, were suffering, while fortunes were being made out of five-acre plots by intensive farming.

Hon. Mr. Brodeur's bill respecting the water carriage of goods was endorsed in principle by the Marine and Fisheries committee of the Commons yesterday morning, but, owing to some difference of opinion between the representatives of the marine interests and the representatives of the shippers as to just how far the bill should go in preventing vessel-owners from contracting themselves out of liability for damage to goods in transit, the bill was held over for further consideration at the next meeting of the committee.

Major Currie said that the drovers of Ontario were considering the question of going out of business. They were held responsible for condemned animals, and last year they lost $400,000. There should be compensation for animals condemned.

Charles L. Owen (East Northumberland) declared that tuberculosis animals were being slaughtered every day and sold to the people as sound meat.

George H. Bradbury (Selkirk) declared that cold storage had increased the cost of living. Provisions were held in cold storage unreasonably long and market prices controlled. He advocated the framing of a Dominion law whereby goods, when they went into cold storage, should be dated, and ordered sold within a certain time.

Claude Macdonnel (Toronto) approved of compensation for the packers, who were the only men who lost money.

Eventually the bill passed through committee, and comes up for third reading.

The St. Lawrence Power Transmission Co. bill monopolized an hour in the House last night. Hon. Wm. Pugsley and Hon. George P. Graham warmly supported the measure, and the latter made a fierce attack on the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission.

Richard Blain had requested that any correspondence between the Federal and Ontario Governments with reference to the bill be produced, but Mr. Pugsley said that so far as he knew, there was no such correspondence.

Regarding the charge made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that the Opposition were holding up the bill because they wanted the Hydro-Electric Commission to have a monopoly, Mr. Blain said he was in favor of such a monopoly of the people of Ontario against all-comers.

Mr. Pugsley said he was lost in amazement at the wonderful ingenuity of the Opposition in creating suspicions regarding the bill. It was simply a power transmission bill and nothing more. Unless they were bound hand and foot with the Hydro-Electric, they ought to vote for the bill.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has given notice of a resolution upon which a bill will be based, creating a department of naval service.

It is provided that the department will be presided over by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, with a deputy Minister drawing $5,000 per annum, and such other officers and clerks as are required.

SENSATIONAL DISCLOSURES IN NEW YORK

CORNELIUS SHUTELT

A recent New York despatch says: The investigation of the corruption in legislation affecting fire insurance companies here has stirred up a lively showdown of practices indulged by the lawmakers with whom the insurance companies had to do business. The probe which is being conducted by Superintendent of State Insurance Hotchkiss promises further sensational developments. One of the witnesses, George F. Seward, brought the name of "Big Tim" Sullivan into the investigation and said the Bowery Senator wanted $10,000. Cornelius Shufelt, a former deputy clerk in the Senate Committee on Insurance, was another witness.

ONE DRYDOCK AT LEVIS AND OTHER AT ST. JOHN

Sir Robert Perks Has a Conference With Hon. Mr. Pugsley, and After Discussion of Problem Announces Location of Big Industries.

Ottawa, April 6.—Before the year ends the construction of two immense dry-docks in Canada will be commenced. They will be not less than nine hundred feet long and a hundred feet wide, and will have a depth of thirty-five feet on the sill. One of these docks will be located at Levis and the other at St. John, N.B. Both docks will be supplemented by adequate facilities for the repairing of vessels of the largest size, and it is probable that in connection with the St. John dock there will be a first-class steel shipbuilding plant.

The Government bill providing a subsidy of three and a half per cent. for thirty-five years on drydocks of not less than nine hundred feet long and the growing demands of Canada's water-borne commerce are responsible for these two important undertakings. One of the leading men behind these drydock enterprises is Sir Robert Perks, who arrived in Ottawa yesterday and had a long conference with Hon. Mr. Pugsley, the Minister of Public Works, who will have the administration of the drydocks as soon as they can be constructed. "Sir Robert Perks and his associates," said Hon. Mr. Pugsley, "are very much in earnest and they are quite capable of carrying through the construction of these docks, with all possible expedition.

Sir Robert Perks said: "A company is being registered at the State Department for the purpose of building the two drydocks. One will be located at Levis and the other at St. John. On this company Harland & Wolff will be represented by Lord Pirrie the Canadian Pacific by Sir Thomas Shaughnessay, the Allan Steamship Co — of that firm, McArthur, Perks & Co. by myself, and there will also be as incorporators Mr. Dobell of Quebec, Mr. Davies of Levis, and Mr. W. E. Foster of St. John. We regard the Canadian Government's bill for drydock aid as satisfactory, and we will be prepared to begin construction work soon after the measure becomes law."

"What will be the size of the docks?"

"Well the bill provides bonuses of three and a half per cent. only for first-class drydocks having a length of at least nine hundred feet, and I do not think that it will be worth while to go in for anything less than first-class docks at these points."

"You will naturally provide the equipment necessary for undertaking the repairs for ships of a character in keeping with the size of the docks?"

"Yes, naturally," said Sir Robert, "as that is an essential complement to a drydock."

"Will the plant be sufficient for steel shipbuilding?"

"A shipbuilding plant will be established in connection with the St. John drydock," said Sir Robert. "The extent of this will depend upon several things, and these details will have to be decided after the company I have referred to has been organised."

"Have you fixed upon the site of the St. John dock yet?"

"Well, there are several sites available there, but the dock will probably be located at the head of Courtenay Bay, where there is an excellent site for both the dock and for the establishment of a shipyard."

LONDON, ONT., THE SCENE OF A SENSATIONAL SHOOTING

An Unknown Man Attacks Miss Elizabeth Franks—For no Known Reason a Stranger Shoots Four Times at Sixty-Five-Year-Old Woman and Then Flees.

London, Ont., April 6.—An unknown man yesterday afternoon, after entering the home of Miss Elizabeth Franks, on the Wellington road, just at the city limit, deliberately, and for no apparent cause, shot at her four times, three times after she was prostrate.

Three bullets took effect, in the ear, nose and neck, but despite her age—she is 65—after the assailant had been scared away, she walked one-quarter of a mile to a corner grocery and asked that the police be telegraphed for. Then, although she was bleeding freely, she walked half a mile further to a sister's in Horton street, where she received medical aid. She declined to go to a hospital, and was later taken home.

Miss Franks, who is well-to-do, lives alone in a large house just at the outskirts of the city, the place being surrounded by a high brick wall.

About 4 o'clock she was in her sitting-room, reading a paper, when there came the sound of shattered glass, and she turned to face the man. She demanded his reason for coming there, and he made no answer, but fired point blank at her. She fled from the room, and he pursued.

At the door she stumbled, and as she lay prostrate, the man fired three more shots at her, and then struck her with the revolver.

Then, though the woman had not screamed, he seemed to grow suddenly afraid and jumping through a window made his escape.

The police seem doubtful as to whether robbery was his motive, as he passed by the woman's gold watch and money and did not take it.

The surrounding country is being secured in pursuit.

He is described as well dressed, short of stature, with ruddy cheeks and black moustache. He was wearing black clothes and left a black Christy hat behind him, which, however serves little purpose towards identification.

The similarity of the crime to the Kinrade murder at Hamilton is being commented on. In both cases, according to evidence, there is an unknown man breaking into a house about the same time of day, and the insane shooting of the victim after being prostrated.

MANSLAUGHTER IS THE VERDICT

James Moran, Who Killed Operator Dyson, is Found Guilty.

North Bay, April 6.—There were three murder cases and one of manslaughter before the jury in the spring Assizes. Chief Justice Mulock presiding, which opened yesterday. Geo. T. Blackstock, K.C., was sufficiently recovered to act as crown prosecutor.

James Moran, aged 19, charged with the murder of Wm. J. Dyson, a young T. & N. O. telegrapher, whose home was in Guelph, at Redwater on Dec. 21, was found guilty of manslaughter, after three hours' deliberation.

William Cornish, a sectionman, said that he and Moran were in Dyson's office, when an altercation arose over a car which had not been unloaded on time. Dyson finally ordered Cornish and Moran to leave the office, and, not being obeyed, secured a club and struck at Cornish, who dodged and clinched. Both fell to the floor with Dyson on top, and choking Cornish, Moran told Dyson to let his chum up, and, no attention being given, picked up Dyson's club and struck three blows on the head. Dyson died in about thirty minutes.

Mr. Blackstock characterized the crime as deliberate murder, unnecessary and cruel, as two other men were nearby and Cornish was in no real peril. Moran's three heavy blows were hard to explain.

TORONTO AND COMMISSION GOVERNMENT

Toronto, April 6.—"Are you in favor of civic government by commission."

This is the question which Controller Ward hopes to have submitted to the electors on Jan. 1 next. He announces that, as soon as the tax rate has been struck, he will introduce a motion into council asking for a referendum as outlined.

The controller's idea is to have a board of five commissioners elected by the city at large. He has not yet decided whether it would be better to have the commission elected on the "recall" system or for a set term of three or four years, but inclines to the former method. By this system, a commissioner who does not "make good" in the public's estimation can be put out of office on a popular vote at any time.

THE CARNEGIES ON WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE

Pittsburg, Pa., April 6.—Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Andrew Carnegie have much sympathy for the cause of woman's suffrage.

"Pick for your wife the girl who takes care of her mother — the girl who is useful in the household, and does not make the most show in the ball room," counselled the Laird of Skibo to the young men at his technical schools.

"The highest work for woman is to help and encourage man. The Margaret Morrison Schools do more good than all the fight for woman's rights," said Mrs. Carnegie, in addressing the girls' department of the technical ——ools.

KILLED AT THE AGE OF NINETY-NINE

Brockville, April 6.—To live to 99 years and then meet a tragic death was the fate of Mrs. Alex. Ingram, who was killed late yesterday afternoon while crossing the C.P.R. loop line on Elm street.

As a shunter, hauling four cars, approached the crossing, the engineer noticed Mrs. Ingram a few yards away from the rails. He sounded the whistle to which she paid no attention. She was struck and literally cut to pieces.

Deceased is survived by a family of six children. She was a remarkably well-preserved woman, mentally and physically.

Galt's rate of assessment is 23 1-4 mills, on a total of property of $4,500,000. The rate is a quarter mill in excess of last year, and would be 1 1-2 mills less but for the loss of revenue under local option.

WHITECLOUD GOES FREE

Sudbury, Ont., April 6. The trial of Dr. Whitecloud, the Indian patent medicine man, charged with the murder of Willie Swede, a 14-year-old boy, at Copper Cliff on Dec. 1, was opened before Justice Magee on Monday, and continued until six o'clock last night, when the jury retired.

The tragedy occurred at a show where Whitecloud was vending his wares. One of the side shows was target rifle shooting by Whitecloud. The small boy was creating a disturbance outside the hall. Once Whitecloud came to the door and flourished a bottle, which scattered his annoyers, but they soon returned and Whitecloud descended to the door. All the boys fled with the exception of the one who was killed, and he stood about 30 feet away. The intestines were perforated in 12 places. The boy lived for five hours after the shooting.

Whitecloud had been shooting the ash off a cigar in a man's mouth with wax bullets, but had picked up the leaden bullet in mistake.

Whitecloud gave evidence that he had never tasted liquor in his life and denied all murderous intent of shooting.

At midnight the jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

MONTREAL GRAFTERS LIKELY TO ESCAPE

GERMANY MAY HAVE BIG STRIKE

Berlin, April 6. The prospect of the most extensive strike in the building trades which has ever occurred in Germany is held out by the decisive action of the delegates representing the Socialist federation of trades unions, comprising 300,000 bricklayers, carpenters, masons, builders and laborers, at a meeting last evening, at which they unanimously rejected the proposed wage tariff which the master builders' union had drawn up. Such a strike would affect at least 350,000 men, spread over the entire country. About 35,000 members of the Christian Trades Union in the same branches have also unanimously decided to join.

The workers demand that the tariff shall be drawn up by an equal number of representatives of workers and employers.

UNION LABEL

DUTY OF THE WATER COMMISSIONERS

No one should find fault with the Water Commissioners for exercising due care in consenting to any agreement that may be made with the Canadian General Electric Company. They should endeavor to come to an understanding without unreasonable delay; they should not try to exact too much; but they would not be performing their duty as commissioners if they did not try to fully protect the city in any contract that may be made.

If the Water Commissioners, the City Council and the company will come together in a reasonable spirit, it ought to be possible to arrive at a satisfactory arrangement. On the one hand the company should take into consideration the fact that the commissioners have power to delay the settlement of the question, and on the other hand the commissioners must remember that the people of Peterborough, whom they represent, are very anxious that the new works of the company shall be located here, rather than in Toronto.

A UNITED PARTY

The Liberals are congratulating themselves upon being a united party. They are united in supporting the Laurier Government in its refusal to grant a fair investigation of the over-classification along the line of the government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. They are united in upholding the principle that contractors should be paid the same price for excavating clay that they would be paid for excavating rock, although the railway costs the country many millions of dollars more than it would cost if an honest classification were made. They are united in supporting Mr. Pugsley's extravagant dredging contracts and his other wasteful expenditures, such for example, as paying five thousand dollars for a sawdust wharf that cost only seven hundred dollars. They are united in refusing to make Mr. McAvity, the influential St. John Liberal, give up the thirty thousand dollars he was paid for his influence in inducing the government to enormously increase the price paid a contractor for dredging in St. John harbor. They are united in upholding graft in many other government transactions. They are united in refusing information to the Opposition about matters that come before Parliament and recently kept the House in session all night rather than agree to show the Opposition the plans prepared for the great dam across the St. Lawrence proposed by the promoters of the St. Lawrence Power project which the Government has been trying to force through Parliament. They are united, too, in refusing to carry out the suggestions of the British Admiralty that Canada should establish a complete naval unit that would be of some value to the Empire in time of war, and they agree in lauding Mr. Fielding for the tariff concessions made to the United States although they declared a few weeks ago that Canada would "stand pat" and make no concessions at all.

It is better to have a little honest difference of opinion in a party than to have all the members tied together like a bundle of sticks in the hands of an unscrupulous leader.

WONDERFUL GROWTH OF CANADA

Mr. S. J. Dennis, who has supervision over the irrigation projects of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the west, believes that 150,000 settlers will come into the Northwest from the United States this year, and that over a quarter of a million people will cross the ocean to settle in Canada.

If this expectation is realised it will represent an addition of 400,000 people to our population in one year. In support of this expectation it is pointed that the number of settlers who have crossed the border during the last three months has been immensely greater than for the same period of any previous year, and as the settlers from the United States last year numbered 86,488, there is some justification for the belief that they will count up to 150,000 this year. Mr. Dennis estimates that these American settlers will bring with them money and effects to the value of $130,000,000.

As regards the immigration from over sea, it is pointed out that every berth in every steamship line running to Canadian ports has been engaged for months ahead, and that many are coming by way of American ports.

Last week twelve thousand settlers passed through Montreal for the far west of Canada, and twenty thousand more are expected within the next two weeks.

We have now over seven and a half million people in Canada. If the annual inflow of immigration averages for twenty years, 400,000 people, the newcomers will outnumber the present population. There is reason to believe that the immigration will increase rather than decrease as time goes on. Moreover, we will have a very large increase of population by births during the next twenty years. It is, therefore, not unreasonable to expect that the population of Canada may be nearly twenty millions within twenty years.

Shall we allow the manufacturers of the United States to supply this great stream of newcomers with manufactured goods? When the flood of immigration was filling up the Western States, the business men of Canada were not allowed to get any benefit from it. They were shut off by the high tariff of the United States. Now that Canada's turn for development has come, why should we divide our good fortune with the United States?

The people of the United States are beginning to realize the present importance and future greatness of Canada. Boston, Buffalo, Detroit, St. Paul and Minneapolis are even now favorable to reciprocity with Canada, and the movement is likely to grow in all the cities of the Northern States.

Some Canadians imagine that we must meet all advances for reciprocity made by the United States, in order to maintain friendly relations whether reciprocity would be advantageous to Canada or not. The fact is that while the Americans will naturally try to get all the concessions they can from Canada, they will respect us more if we follow their example and develop our own home industries by a high protective tariff. As soon as they understand that this is to be the settled policy of Canada, their manufacturers will establish branch factories in Canada.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. AT THE GALLERY DINNER.

Old Time Journalist Tells of Early Days in the House.

At the Press Gallery dinner in Ottawa recently, one of the old-timers who prides himself upon having been present on every occasion "ever since there was a Gallery dinner," talked of the gatherings of the press men and their friends.

"It must have been back in 1883 or so that the late Hon. Thomas White was the guest of honor at a gallery dinner. He was given this place by reason of the fact that his son, R. S. White, universally and fraternally known as 'Bob' White, now collector of customs at Montreal, was the president and ex-officio chairman of the dinner. The Honorable Tom, then one of the old-timers in journalism, gave a reminiscent speech, going back to interesting events which occurred, as he said, 'before the gentleman who presides over this festive board was born.' A feature of that dinner was a song by the guest of the evening, sung in a pleasant tenor voice and enthusiastically chorused by the company. The song was a ditty popular in that day, 'McSorley's Twins.'

"At a later banquet, another singer who aroused great enthusiasm was also a Montreal man, the late Judge Curran. The dinner was not so bright as press dinners usually are, but when Judge Curran took hold, and, in rollicking voice, and with just a touch of the brogue, sang 'Old King Cole,' everybody woke up, and from that time on the dinner went with a swing which made it one of the most successful ever held.

"For many years, no dinner was quite complete without a speech by the late Nicholas Flood Davin. His finest effort was in a big dinner at the Russell House, about 1890. Burlesque speeches had been chosen for the speakers, and Davin covered himself with glory by a delightful burlesque on 'The Emancipated Intellect.'

"The dinner at which this speech was made was notable, and probably unique, for one reason. It was attended by the Governor-General, at that time Lord Stanley of Preston, now the Earl of Derby. The president of that year, the late T. P. Gorman, had taken it upon himself to invite the Governor-General, and, to the consternation of those who feared that the dinner would be suddenly turned from a convivial gathering into a state function, Lord Stanley promptly accepted the invitation.

"The only hope of those who enjoyed the pleasant freedom of these dinners, was that the Governor-General, when he had responded to his own health and shown a polite interest in his hosts, would gracefully relieve the gathering from the restraint of his official presence. But it turned out quite differently. There was no man at the table who seemed to enjoy better the speeches and songs and conversation than the jovial governor. It was not long before the press men realized that Stanley had appeared without his official robes. He was accepted for the good fellow that he was, he stayed 'until the last dog was hung,' and departed protesting to the president and other members of the gallery that he had not had a pleasanter evening during his stay in Canada.

"There is one institution connected with the press dinner which, to the delight of all the members of the gallery, still stands unimpaired—this institution is the speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In the old days, when a slim, thoughtful, young man, Wilfrid Laurier, a leading member of the Opposition, afterwards leader of the Opposition, sat, as a rule, on the left of the chairman. There was no speech that was more heartily received, for it was understood by all that the gallery dinner was an occasion that Laurier loved and enjoyed. And now, the grey-haired veteran statesman is always the chief guest, and has the place of honor. His speeches on these occasions are never reported, for it is one of the standing rules of the gallery that, as the boys jokingly put it, 'reporters are not admitted.' The speech is always brief, it is nearly always reminiscent, but it is graceful, witty, and, as ever, it seems to be the expression of the speaker's true heart and mind.

"The present leader of the Opposition, Mr. R. L. Borden, is following in the footsteps of his predecessor in that position in his regular attendance at the press gallery dinner, and there is no man who seems to have a better time while there. And no man makes a better speech than does the courteous, thoughtful, virile leader of the Conservatives in the House of Commons."

Princess in the Slums.

Sympathy for the poor, kindness and unconventionality are the chief characteristics of Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, whose water-color sketches have been sold in aid of King Edward VII. Hospital at Windsor. Many instances are recorded of the princess' devotion of both time and money to the poor, and her untiring labors of love and her complete absence of "side" have gained for her a place in the hearts of the people of the slum districts. In Bermondsey, where her good work is chiefly carried on, few of the dwellers are aware of her identity. Princess Victoria tells many good stories of her work in the slums. On the occasion of a visit to a poor home her royal highness found a pale-faced young mother unsuccessfully trying to soothe her crying baby to sleep. Princess Victoria suggested that the mother should try milk as a remedy. "No," said the parent. "'es's 'ad enough. There's only one thing that will do it, and I can't do it because I've got a sore throat." "Perhaps I could?" suggested the royal visitor. "I should be glad if you could," responded the woman. "If you make a noise like a bottle 'e'll be off in a jiffy."

A Research of Many Beds.

One of the Emperor Menelik's weaknesses is the matter of beds. In his sleeping palace there are a number of rooms, and each possesses a different bedstead, either of wood or iron, built high or low. It is the emperor's practice to sleep in one or the other, just as the fancy takes him. Since his last serious illness he has considerably changed his mode of living. He was accustomed to take violent exercise, but he has renounced this for a sedentary life.

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"Then, papa, darling, I don't want you to do it. I didn't see it in that light."

"No, dear, of course not. How should you? But I want to do it. I've considered it well, and I'd rather do it, for when I've made this sacrifice for you you won't be unwilling to make one for me, will you, darling?"

"What sacrifice?" she faltered.

"You'd give this man up."

"Oh, but I love him!"

There was no mistaking the accent of the cry. It came from her because she could not help it. It fell on the stillness with the strangeness of a sacred avowal flung out on the common air. It was followed by a hush. A long minute passed before Trafford spoke again.

"But you don't love him better than me?" he asked softly, leaning forward, with his strong eyes bent upon her.

"Not better, papa—differently," she managed to stammer, her cheeks flaming now as if with sudden shame.

"You wouldn't give me up for him?"

"I couldn't give you up at all."

"But if the choice lay between him and me?"

She sat with eyes downcast and made no answer.

"What then?" Trafford persisted softly.

Again she made no answer. Laura leaned forward and whispered in his ear.

"Dear Uncle Trafford, do you think it wise to ask her these questions now?"

He waved her back and kept on.

"If the choice lay between him and me, Paula, dear, what then? After the way we've loved you, after all we've done for you, after the happy years together, would you go away with this stranger, my enemy, and leave your mother and me alone?"

"He isn't your enemy, papa," she declared, seizing the one point on which she was able to reply.

"I must judge of that. But would you go with him—that's what I'm asking? Your mother is ill, and I'm growing old. You're all we have, all God has left with us. Would you desert us for a man you didn't even know a year ago?"

She raised her burning face to him again.

"Oh, papa, how can I answer you? How can you bear to torture me like this? Surely you know what love is—not such love as yours and mine, but the love of man and woman. If you don't know it the others must. Mamma, I appeal to you. Laura, I appeal to you. You know what a woman's heart is when it's given to the one man to whom it can ever go out. You know that I can't say anything. You know that I can't answer him. Help me. Protect me. You're women like myself. Mamma! Mamma!"

She ended with a little cry.

"Yes, dear. I'm here."

Mrs. Trafford bustled forward with a sob. Paula sprang to meet her, and mother and daughter were clasped in each other's arms.

"That spoils it," Trafford commented, turning wearily to Laura. "There's no dealing with argument like that."

A half hour later as he was lighting a cigar in his office Mrs. Trafford stole in. She was pale and trembling.

"I've got her to bed," she said, with some hesitation. "She'll be quieter now. She's been terribly unnerved, poor lamb."

He stood with his foot on the fender and neither answered nor turned round.

"It's my fault, Paul," she began weakly.

"So we understood," he flung over his shoulder. "Why return to the point again?"

"Because I want you to forgive me, Paul."

"What's forgiveness got to do with it? Forgiveness won't give me my daughter back."

"She's my daughter, too, Paul. You seem to forget that."

"Oh, no. I don't. The fact that she is your daughter is the only possible excuse for leaving her in your incompetent care."

"Oh, Paul! After all the years that we've been married you say that to me!"

"Good night," he returned, still over his shoulder.

"I'm very ill, Paul"— she began once more.

"You won't get any better by standing in this cold room."

"You don't know how ill I am. I've never told you, Paul, I beseech you"— she went on brokenly.

"I'm tired," he said, leaning heavily on the mantelpiece. "I really think we'd better say good night."

She turned slowly and left him. He heard her go half way up the stairs and come down to his door again. She stood a minute, but as he made no sign she turned heavily away once more.

He listened without moving till her door closed behind her. Then he flung himself into an armchair and smoked. He smoked on and on, while the clock on the mantelpiece chimed off the hours. His mind worked back to the past and forward to the future. He lived through again the old days of strife and drew comfort from the thought of his huge successes and his many victories. By degrees his pain and anger died down together. The longing for the love and tenderness of his own home came back to him.

"After all, she's been a good wife to me," he muttered to himself reproachfully. "I'm a brute to treat her so, and I'm a brute to my little girl."

The early June dawn was breaking when he rose to go upstairs. The house was very quiet, and he went on tiptoe past his wife's door for fear of waking her.

"Suppose I do wake her," he thought suddenly—"wake her with a kiss. It will please her."

He turned the handle and entered softly. A faint light was stealing in. He went to the bedside and bent over. But when his lips touched hers he knew that she would never wake again.

CHAPTER XIV.

It was natural that during the fortnight following upon Mrs. Trafford's death Paula's more personal affairs should recede to the background. Trafford's grief for his wife was deep and sincere, all the more so from the circumstances in which she had died. The mere mention of Winship's name would have been an intrusion upon sorrow.

But as the days went by and life seemed to resume its normal routine it became impossible to ignore the fact that such a subject could not be forgotten. There was an uneasy sense of it in the minds of all. The very reticence with which some themes were avoided, the very skill by which others were touched upon with tact, heightened the perception that it was among them, like an invisible presence, at all times when they came together. If Paula and her father were alone, they kept silence—a guarded, conscious silence—in which the only spontaneous element was the dread of what might follow upon speech. Their affection for each other was not diminished. It was only changed by the loss of the old clear strain of confidence. They were falling into that painful mutual attitude in which each looks for the other's move. Trafford's lack of action was diplomatic. He had lived through many occasions in which he had learned the advantage of just this kind of waiting. Paula was dumb only because she did not know what to say.

When Trafford spoke at last it was for the reason that he thought he had found his way. He had entered Paula's boudoir one morning on some unimportant errand connected with the day's domestic affairs.

"And, by the way," he said casually as he turned to leave her, "how long will it take you to close up this house? I have important business that will require our going to America."

For a few seconds she made no response, but it seemed to Trafford as if her slight black robed figure became more erect against the tints of white and rose and gold which formed the background.

"Then we shouldn't go to Versailles," she said when she had found voice. "We should be away all summer."

"Oh, yes; longer in all probability."

"All winter too?"

"Well, I meant indefinitely."

"And not live in this house any more?"

"It isn't necessary to say as much as that. We can close it and leave it with the caretakers. If ever we want to come back to it, we can. It was your poor mother's idea more than mine from the very first. Now that she's no longer with us"—

"Are you doing this with the object of separating me from Mr. Winship, papa?"

Trafford was not expecting a question so direct. He turned fully round and confronted her.

"I thought it might have that effect," he said quietly.

"It wouldn't," she replied in a tone like his own.

"Do you mean that you wouldn't come with me?"

"Oh, no, papa. Of course I should go with you. But it wouldn't separate me from him. Nothing would; nothing ever will."

"I suppose you know it's painful to me to hear you talk like that?"

"But you make me do it, papa. You force me to say the things on which any other girl is able to keep silent. I only do it to make you understand."

"Understand what?"

"That I love him; that I shall always love him, even if I were never to see him again, even if I were to marry some one else. I should belong to him. I belong to him already. I've given him not only my heart, but my word. I've given it and repeated it. I ought to tell you, papa, that I've seen him again since that day."

"Where?"

"In the same place—for a few minutes only."

"Clandestinely?"

"That isn't a word that should be applied to me, papa. It was an accident. I didn't stay, even though he had something to explain to me. I wouldn't even let him write to me without your knowledge. And yet I feel free to see him if I choose."

"Even though it be against my command?"

"I don't think I ought to be subjected to command on such a point."

"You'll allow perhaps that I have some claim."

"And that I have some right."

"What right?"

"The right of the human being to love where there is no impediment. I don't ask for anything strange or astonishing. I'm only begging for the use of an inalienable privilege."

"You mean the privilege to marry when and where and how you choose without regard to those who've loved you and cared for you, and who are as much concerned in the act as you are. I never expected you, dear, to blind yourself with that sort of sophistry."

"You put me in a very hard position, papa. You give me the choice between two courses—I may marry him and displease you, or I may give him up and break my heart. Which would you do if you were in my place?"

"There's one thing I shouldn't do. I shouldn't ally myself with a man who could never stand toward my own father otherwise than with a drawn sword in his hand."

"I'm sure he doesn't, papa."

"And I know he does. I take it for granted that the man is neither a coward nor a fool. You'll allow perhaps that I have some acquaintance with human nature. I know his type and I know his breed. He can't have inherited any other feeling toward me than one of revenge. Mind you, I don't say that I blame him much, not any more than I should blame the serpent that bites with poison. I warn you. Have anything more to do with this man and the struggle ceases to be between you and me. It passes to me and him, and it will last till one or other of us is alone on the field with the victory."

"But is there no such thing as forgiveness, papa?"

"No—not among men, not in business. There it isn't even the eye for the eye and the tooth for the tooth. It's the trick in the dark or the stab in the back or any other means that commends itself. Forgiveness has no more place in that world than nectar and ambrosia have in this. You can't fight with balms on the field of battle, and your lover and I shouldn't choose the weapons that hurt least."

"Ah, but why fight at all?"

"Do you think that if I stayed my hand he would stay his? Not a bit. I might have my arms bound to my side, and he'd have at me none the less. If you married him, that would be my position. You may be sure I shouldn't strike at your husband. I should stand still and let him strike at me. He'd do it, mind you, if he's a Winship. He'd do it, and he'd keep it up till I was riddled like St. Sebastian. I'm not at the beginning of my experience of the Winship relentlessness. I told you on the very night your dear mother died how many wounds I had carried out of the big war I've had to wage. None were so deadly as those which came from just that quarter, and their shots have never ceased. If they don't fire them still, there are others who do. There are others who make use of the Winship defeat to beg for public sympathy in their own, and they get it. You've only to look through the newspapers and magazines to see it. I could afford to laugh them to scorn if it were not for one simple fact. The chain can't be stronger than its weakest link. So I'm weak, dear Paula, in everything that touches you."

"Papa, you wrong him. Do believe me. I know him so well. All that is as much blotted out for him as if it had never been. It isn't as though he had had any actual share in the trouble. He hadn't—not any more than I. And he's so good, so noble! If you'd only be willing to see him, to get to know him, to let him know you, then you'd be as sure of that as I am. He doesn't care anything for money or for the strife about money. I thought that strange at first until I began to see that the things he lives for are higher than"—

"Than those I've lived for. Be it so. You're arguing beside the mark, dear. The great fact remains that one of us, you or I, must yield, and," he added, fixing her with one of his strong looks, "I've never yielded."

Turning slowly away, she walked to a window and gazed down for a minute on the trees and traffic of the Avenue du Bois. When she confronted him again her own look was as strong as his.

"I'd yield, papa, if I thought it was right."

"And don't you?"

"You make it so hard for me to see."

"Surely I put it plainly enough."

"It isn't that I don't see what you mean. It's that you give me such a terrible alternative. I must sacrifice either him or you"—

"Or yourself."

"I don't count myself. If I could only satisfy both your claims and his, I should be willing to suffer anything."

Trafford winced at the words, but maintained his ground.

"He has no claims."

"Oh, yes, he has, papa. He loves me."

"Wiltshire loved you too. That didn't give him a right."

"But I didn't love the duke, and I do love Roger Winship. I know it's wrong on my part, but I could see the one suffer with only a passing pang, while if I withdraw my word from the other it will be like plunging a sword not only into his heart, but into my own."

"Then it's possible that you should withdraw your word?"

"Anything would be possible that was right."

"And you'd have the strength to do it?"

"I should have to have the strength if I had the conviction. I couldn't go on in a course I thought wrong, whatever happiness it might bring."

"That's a brave girl."

"But, oh, papa, I can't see it yet. I can't promise."

"Not yet, dear, perhaps," he said coaxingly, "but you could take it into consideration, couldn't you? You could think about it as a probability."

"No, not a probability."

"Well, then, a possibility. In any case we could go to America and stay there awhile, and then we'd see."

"If you mean that I might come in time to think less about him and give him up more easily—that couldn't be."

"But you could give him up; that's the main thing. Mind you, I don't say you would have to, but if it came to the point"—

"I might have the courage, papa. I don't know. It's not ... should have the strength ... can if one has to do it. And after all, I don't care what happens to me so long as you're pleased and are saved from being wounded again and we can all see our way to doing what is right and"—

But Trafford turned sharply away, leaving her with the words dying on her lips and the brave look still shining in her eyes.

CHAPTER XV.

"She disarms me," Trafford said when he recounted the interview to Mrs. George later in the day.

Since his wife's death he had come to depend a good deal on Laura. Her little sitting room offered him a refuge in times of loneliness, while the common sense of her conversation was a relief from the strain that life had lately taken on.

"I can understand that," Laura returned, looking up from her stitching. "All her instincts are so right that one feels placed in the wrong, whether one is wrong or not. But there are two things of which I am more and more convinced as I grow older. The one is that nothing is more precious in life than the love and peace of families, and the other is this—that to preserve them it must happen from time to time that some one has to yield and perhaps to suffer."

"Exactly," Trafford agreed warmly. "I can't save her from suffering, can I? God knows I would if I could."

"I'm sure of that, dear Uncle Trafford. One can't have a child of one's own without knowing that in everything it has to bear one suffers twice oneself."

"Twice? I suffer twenty times. Since this thing has happened to my little girl there's nothing she feels that isn't multiplied in me over and over again, like a reflection in double mirrors. I give you my word, Laura, that I rack my brains to explain why the one event in all the world that could have hurt me most should have come upon me. It almost carries me back to the belief in a God who occupies himself with the details of our affairs and brings the moral consequences of our acts upon us, and I'd given up that idea long ago."

"I often think," Laura observed in her musing tone, "that it's easier to suffer oneself than to see some one we love have to do it. I can't keep myself from wishing that Paula might be as happy as Aunt Trafford was with the man she loved and as I've been with George."

"The cases are different," Trafford jerked out dryly.

"Oh, yes, I know that. It seems a pity, too, because they say he's such a fine fellow and sure to make a great name for himself."

"How do you know that?"

A New Idea

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Anyone present at the Board of Trade meeting last night would see the value of Mr. Ruddy's idea of placing the waterworks and whole industrial power scheme in the hands of one man and let him be engineer and industrial commissioner in one, and then it will save the town hundreds of dollars that will have to be paid to Mr. Kennedy or some other engineer for ordinary everyday carpenter's advice. I am fine that the Council has taken hold of this matter so strong, for if it had been let go the way it was going no business man would have been pleased to see the extensions in Toronto instead of here. Get big, gentlemen, get big, and get busy. Being small is bad policy at any old time.

COMMITTEE OF NINE

Will be Appointed Whose Duties Will be to Beautify and Keep in Condition, Central Park

Captain McWilliams, as one of a deputation of the officers of the 57th Regiment, waited upon the Board of Education at their meeting last night with a proposal that a committee, to be composed of three from the Regiment, three from the Board of Education, and three from the City Council, be formed for the purpose of working together with a view of beautifying Central Park and keeping it in such a condition as would be of credit to the city.

Mr. D. W. Dumble was not altogether in favor of the proposal. It was a case of "we will paddle our own canoe you paddle yours," with Mr. Dumble. Visions of the park being turned into a parade ground did not appeal to him.

Mr. Hill and Col. Miller favored the proposal. In his remarks, Col. Miller said that he felt sure the regiment would confine themselves to the square in front of the armories.

The motion moved by Mr. Hill, seconded by Col. Miller, that the chairman of the Board of Education be authorized to appoint three members to meet with three of the officers of the regiment and three of the Horticultural Society or City Council, was carried.

WERE WARNED AND DISCHARGED

Young Men Who Were Disorderly on the Gravel Road Had to Pay the Cost of the Case

Magistrate Edmison has dealt with the case in which the four young men were charged with disorderly conduct. They were all implicated in the assault of a young man, who, accompanied by two ladies, was driving on the Gravel road recently. His Worship discharged them after giving them a warning. They were ordered to pay the costs of the case, which amounted to about $24.00.

Just Slumbering

Three young men walking along the railway track near Nicholl's Oval the other evening, experienced a severe shock when they noticed a man lying beside the railway tracks. His head was downward on the incline at the side of the track. They thought the man had been struck by a passing train. However, he proved to be only an ordinary "drunk" and strongly resented being wakened from his slumbers.

SOME TEACHERS WILL RECEIVE HIGHER SALARIES

Schedule Has Been Amended—Property Committee Reported That Request of Board Regarding Gymnasium Matter is Not Acceptable to Department of Education

The reports read by Messrs. W. H. Hill and Robert Fair for their respective committees at the regular meeting of the Board of Education last night are of general interest. The Committee on Appointments, of which Mr. Hill is chairman, has besides securing a teacher to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. G. W. Hofferd at the Collegiate Institute, amended the salary schedule of the junior department of the Institute, and the Public Schools, and the Property Committee, of which Mr. Fair is chairman, reported that the request of the Board to the Minister of Education, regarding the gymnasium matter, had not met with the success hoped for. The reports are as follows:—

To the chairman and members of the Board of Education:

Your Committee on Appointments beg leave to report and recommend as follows:—

(1) That Mr. Arnott M. Patterson be appointed substitute on the Collegiate Institute staff for the months of April, May and June, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. G. W. Hofferd, salary to be at the rate of $100.00 per month, and duties to start as soon after the 1st of April as possible.

(2) That the Collegiate Institute salary schedule affecting the junior department be amended to read as follows, and to date from the 1st September, 1910: Minimum salary $1,250, increasing $50.00 per year until the present maximum of $1,400.00 is reached.

(3) That the Public School salary schedule be amended as follows, and to take effect 1st September, 1910:

(a) Principals of schools of 8 rooms and over $1,150, to $1,300, increasing $50 per year.

(b) Principals of schools of less than 8 rooms, $1,000 to $1,150, increasing $50 per year.

(c) Male assistants, 1st or 2nd class certificates, $850.00 to $1,000.00, increasing $50 per year.

(d) Lady Assistants:

(1) First class certificates $500 to $650, increasing $50 for 1st year, and $25 per year thereafter. (No change in this item.)

(2) Second class certificates $450 to $600, increasing $50 for the first year and $25 per year thereafter.

(e) Kindergarten Supervisors—Same salary as holders of second class certificates.

No teacher to receive less than the minimum under this schedule.

The rules applicable to the schedule adopted in March, 1907, to remain in force and to apply to this amended schedule.

Respectfully submitted.
W. H. HILL,
Chairman.

Board room, April 5th, 1910.

To the chairman and members of the Board of Education:

Gentlemen,—Your Property Committee beg leave to report and recommend as follows:—

Regarding the matter of providing a gymnasium for the Collegiate Institute, as called for in Inspector Wetherell's report on his recent visit of inspection, and which was referred to this committee, we beg to report that before taking any steps to bring in a recommendation, your committee considered it advisable to have a deputation wait on the Minister of Education with a view of getting his consent to continue the present arrangement with the Y.M.C.A. (for a period of from three to five years without losing our status, but exceedingly regret to have to report that the Board's request would not be acceptable to the department.

Your committee, therefore, refer the matter back to the Board for further instructions.

The matter of the placing of fire escapes on the East City and East Ward schools which was referred to your committee, is receiving their attention, and we hope to be able to report in the near future (that the same have been satisfactorily erected.

Your committee ask that they be authorized to advertise for the fuel for the ensuing year, with power to award the contract for the same.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. FAIR,
Chairman.

THE CLIMAX

When Sarah Bernhardt was asked recently what was the most important thing in the making of a great actress, she replied "First of all, a voice." And it is the human voice and its wonderful mechanism which seems to constitute an extremely important feature of "The Climax," by Edward Locke, with incidental music by Joseph Carl Breil, which Joseph Weber will present at the Grand Opera House, Thursday night, April 7th, with the original New York players. Every actor and actress in "The Climax" must sing and play the piano. The combination of the three talents is rarely found. Tickets on sale at Box Office.

OTHER BUSINESS

On motion of Messrs. Robt. Fair and B. F. Ackerman, the treasurer was authorized to issue a cheque to R. J. Wolstenholm for $900 on account. The full amount is $941.47, but it has not been certified to in full.

On motion Mr. A. Mowat, Public School Inspector, read a report on the Ontario Educational Convention, held in Toronto, and which he attended in the latter part of March. The many valuable points embodied in the report were heartily appreciated by the members of the Board, and the general feeling was that a greater interest should be taken in this annual convention, by the Peterborough Board of Education.

Dr. Morrison moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Mowat, and it was seconded by Mr. Fair and carried.

Dr. Morrison submitted a request for an ammeter and voltmeter, to be used by Mr. Fraenden, in his electrical class. The instruments will cost $15.00. On motion the matter was referred to the Supervision Committee.

A Link Between East and West

A remarkable example of the advantages of making reliable goods is to be found in the demand which comes from the great Canadian West for the pure wool tweeds made by the Hewsons of Nova Scotia. So many people have gone West from Eastern homes where the name "Hewson" stands for all that is best in cloth and knitted goods, that the call comes back for the goods, strong, comfortable woollens that the boys used to wear "at home,"

"I hardly know how to thank you for the good Peruna has done me.

"I suffered five years with pain in the stomach. About a year ago it became so bad I could hardly bear it. I coughed day and night and grew weaker and weaker. The pain extended through my body and I also had difficulty in breathing, which made me cough. Everyone thought I had consumption.

"My husband heard of Peruna and bought five bottles. This treatment virtually cured me and now I recommend Peruna to every one who is suffering.

"I thank Dr. Hartman for this excellent remedy."

Ste. Julie de Vercheres, P. Q., Canada. —Mrs. Mois Pariseau.

A NEGLECTED cold is generally the first cause of catarrh.

Women are especially liable to colds. These colds occur more frequently during the wet, sloppy weather of winter and spring than any other time of the year. Often they are not considered serious and are allowed to run on, or they are treated in such a way as to only palliate the symptoms, while the cold becomes more deep-seated and the patient finally awakens to the fact that she has a well-developed case of catarrh.

WOMEN SHOULD BEWARE OF CATCHING COLD.

PE-RU-NA THE REMEDY FOR CATARRH OF THE LUNGS.

By reason of their delicate structure, the lungs are frequently the seat of a cold, especially if there is the slightest weakness of these organs. The treatment of catarrh of the lungs is also more difficult and discouraging than catarrh of any other organ of the body.

It would be wise therefore, to guard against it by every precaution possible. Peruna has been found the most reliable of all remedies for coughs, colds and catarrh, by reason of the fact that it goes at once to the very seat of the trouble.

It searches out every crevice, every duct of the body. It quickens and equalizes the circulation of the blood, thus relieving the congested mucous membranes. It exercises a healing and soothing effect upon the mucous membranes, no matter whether they are the more exposed membranes of the head and throat, or whether they line the remotest cells of the lungs.

Mrs. Jaschob, 1631 Hicks St., Toledo, Ohio, writes:

"When I wrote to you for advice, I had been sick for three years. I had trouble with my throat. Often I could not breathe through my nose. I also had pains in my chest and a cough. I took Peruna according to directions and it has cured me."

WAS PRESENTED WITH PRETTY PEARL RING

Miss Ethel Goodenough, a talented member of Mrs. Greenslade's pianoforte class, who is leaving for Regina, with her parents, was the recipient of a presentation from the class last evening. She was given a pretty pearl ring, the presentation taking place at the home of Mrs. Greenslade, where a social hour was spent. Miss Ruby Carr made the presentation and Miss Alberta Rehill read the following address:—

Miss Ethel Goodenough, city:

Dear Ethel,—It was with the deepest feelings of regret that we, the pupils of Mrs. Greenslade's pianoforte classes, learned of your decision to leave the city. We feel that we cannot let the opportunity pass without letting you know our appreciation of your pleasant and agreeable disposition, and your willingness to help at all times the other pupils. We hope you will soon make as many friends in your new home in the west as you are leaving behind you.

We ask you to accept this pearl ring, which we trust will always serve to remind you of your many well-wishing friends in Peterborough, who join in wishing you every success.

Signed on behalf of the pupils,
ALBERTA REHILL,
RUBY CARR.

The recipient of the gift made a suitable reply, expressing her thanks for the token of remembrance.

FAVORABLE TO THE C. G. E. PROPOSAL

Prevelant Opinion at Board of Trade Meeting Was That Acceptance of Offer Would Benefit the City—Fair Directors Ask for Co-Operation in Purchase of Permanent Fair Grounds

One of the largest and most vitally important questions that has had to be dealt with in Peterborough for some time was the principal topic of discussion at the special meeting of the board of trade at council chamber last night. The subject was one that presented two phases of discussion, the $70,000 by-law and the C.G.E. proposition, the clauses of which are generally known to Peterborough citizens. The debate on the matter was a thorough one and the different arguments were excellently presented. It was quite evident that the concensus of opinion was that the C.G.E. should be encouraged to make the extensions here and be given deserved encouragement and reasonable treatment.

President, Ald. G. A. Gillespie, was in the chair and there was a good representation of the members of the board and a very large and interested attendance of representative citizens.

The minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary, T. Q. Quartermaine, and adopted as read.

A letter was read from the Railway Business Association of New York asking the board to adopt a resolution concerning proposed railway legislation at Washington, which would be of international importance. Referred to Railway Committee.

CONCERNING FAIR GROUNDS.

Mr. J. H. Garbutt, on behalf of a deputation from the Peterborough Industrial Fair, spoke to the board requesting the co-operation of the board and City Council in the purchasing of suitable grounds for the fair. Mr. Garbutt stated that the lease had expired on the present grounds and asked for the support of the board in the securing of suitable grounds. The public had supported the fair generously and in the event of suitable grounds being obtained the directors would feel dutybound to erect good buildings.

Mr. Dawson Kennedy, of the Board of Directors, thought it was desirable that the Board of Trade should meet with a committee of the fair directors for the object of discussing the proposal.

It was moved by Mr. D. O'Connell and seconded by Mr. R. F. McWilliams, that a committee be appointed to take up the matter with the fair directors.

THE POWER QUESTION.

The president announced that the meeting was called for the discussion the power question. He thought it might be well for the meeting to decide whether the discussion should be on the by-law for the generating of power by the city or concerning the C.G.E. proposition.

Mr. A. P. Poussette thought the proposal of the company ought to be before the board and made thoroughly known before the discussion was taken up. On consent of Mayor Morrow the letter addressed to him by Mr. Nicholls and containing the terms of the latest proposal of the company was read by the president. The proposition has been fully given by the local press. At the request of Mr. McWilliams, the president also outlined the former proposition from the company.

Mr. Poussette thought it would be interesting to have some outline of what the commissioners intended to do in the matter in case the sum of $70,000 was voted for the development of power at the dam, and that some pledge should be gotten from the Water Commissioners as to what they would do with the power in such an event.

The chairman said that he thought neither the Council nor the Water Commissioners had come to any definite terms in the matter.

Mr. W. H. Moore, of the Water Commission, said he had not come to address the meeting, but to obtain light on the matter. He outlined the commissioners' plan concerning a filtration plant, lighting the town in case of the present contract not being renewed, and concerning the reducing of the water rate.

Mr. Larmonth thought that if there was to be a discussion on the by-law Mr. Poussette's point was well taken.

Mr. Poussette thought both matters should be discussed concurrently. He said if the by-law was carried the generation of the power and control of the power would be in the hands of the Water Commissioners. He thought their duty was merely to see to the supply of water and was of the opinion that it would be foolish for the people to vote on a by-law, before the commissioners were divested of that authority.

The chairman explained that there was legislation providing for the Water Commissioners becoming Power Commissioners, as power was developed.

Mr. Poussette thought it was very bad legislation! (Laughter.)

He looked very favorably upon the C.G.E.'s proposal. The $2,000 to be paid to the city, if invested at 4 1-2 per cent. interest, would amount to $65,000 at the end of 20 years, and then the city would have the power house, and in case the company's proposal was accepted they promised to immediately erect buildings at a cost of $250,000, and make a large increase in their staff of employees.

Mr. D. W. Dumble said the proposition was a very important one, and demanded careful consideration. It was simply a question of whether it would be judicious to give the company what they wanted. There was not the slightest chance of the present council or any other council keeping the $2,000. It would be used in municipal improvements.

The C. G. E. would just employ as many men in the future as they required, and as they have done in the past, and would give no bond as to the number of men they would engage.

The C.G.E. was owed consideration, but whether the town would accept the proposition was another matter. The cheapest power in America was $15. Taking $15, 1,500 h.p. would be $15,000 a year. If the C.G.E. got that for $5 a h.p. less they would be saving $5,000 a year, and at the end of twenty years they would have $100,000 to the good. That was the advantage to them, and it should be considered, as well as the benefit to the city. The question was a financial one, and had to be considered from that basis. The proposition was not a businesslike one in the way it was made.

The water commission was one appointed to handle the special business in question. The Council were taken out of shops and stores and changed every year. The commissioners were specially appointed and had transacted their business in a way that had won them the confidence of the people. The figure offered by the company was not large enough.

THE SELLING OF THE POWER.

Mr. McWilliams said Mr. Poussette stated the case in favor of the proposition very clearly. He thought the city was prepared to accept a policy for the development of industries, and he thought the further development of old industries was even a better plan than the securing of new ones.

The question was: Should the commissioners sell the power at what it cost them or should they endeavor to make a handsome profit out of it?

It seemed to Mr. McWilliams that the policy of the Water commission should not be to make a profit out of the works. They had no right to make a profit out of the ratepayers and if the water commissioners as a substantial benefit to the city, could dispose of the power at cost of development they should do so.

MATTER IN GOOD HANDS.

Dr. M. A. Morrison wasn't quite satisfied that the proposition to submit the $70,000 by-law to the people was the policy that should be adopted by the city. Developing the power at the waterworks dam might cost more for h.p. than the city was prepared to pay. The water commissioners had all the information concerning the matters under discussion and he was prepared on his own part to leave the matter in the hands of the water commissioners and City Council.

A GOOD PROPOSITION.

Mr. J. H. Larmouth thought the proposition that the C.G.E put to the town was the best they would do. The C.G.E. would pay a fixed sum of $2,000 a year put in machinery and generate power and pay interest on the sinking fund. When this was figured out the C.G.E. was not getting the power as cheaply as many thought they would be getting it. It was not much cheaper than they could buy it here now under the present conditions.

THE COMMISSION PROTECTED.

Mr. T. F. Matthews stated Mr. Dumble had intimated that if the commissioners made a little money the council might take it from them. Under present legislation that was not possible. He said a report was expected at once from the engineer in which important information would be contained and it would be laid before the Council. The Council had not attempted to take the business in connection with the new dam out of the hands of the commission.

PUBLIC SHOULD KNOW.

Mr. H. M. Ruddy, K.C., said that Peterborough wanted new industries. He thought that every phase of the matter should be known to the public in order that they might judge if the negotiations from every standpoint were being made in a businesslike way. Mr. Poussette's argument, he thought, was forcible and he was of the opinion that if the $2,000 was expended from the city treasury it could be used to advantage.

Mr. B. F. Ackerman thought the matter was in good hands when the water commissioners and City Council.

NO DELAY IN NEGOTIATIONS.

Mr. T. F. Matthews and Mayor Morrow said there was no delay in negotiations as far as the council and water commission were concerned. At the Council meeting Wednesday (to-night) the matter would be dealt with. In taking up the submitting of the by-law the Council did so at the instance of the commission, who assured the Council that there would be plenty of surplus power. If the C. G. E. hadn't made their proposition he thought the by-law very feasible. Under the circumstances he considered the C.G.E.'s offer a good business proposition, particularly in view of the fact that $70,000 would be saved.

Mr. Petterson assured the meeting that the council and water commissioners had acted with dispatch and intelligence.

THE COST OF POWER.

Mr. W. H. Meldrum did not think that $70,000 would be required for the work proposed. He thought if the water commissioners would take the ratepayers into their confidence and tell them in detail what the money would be used for there would be less opposition to their proposals to vote money.

He thought the C.G.E. proposition was a good one. Mr. Meldrum explained it would cost about $10 to $11 a h.p. to generate the power, and $4 or $5 to transmit it. This would make a total of about $15 a h.p.

Mr. Poussette said he was drafting a resolution he would like to have an expression of opinion from the board on. Mr. McWilliams didn't think the subject was one on which a resolution should be passed. The latter suggestion was acted upon.

ANOTHER CASE OF SUNDAY SHOOTING

A resident of Ashburnham, residing near the C.P.R. swing bridge, complains of the practice on Sundays of young men who discharge firearms in Dickson's woods. It is his opinion that the proper authorities should take up the matter, and if possible make such an example, which would put a stop to the practice.

ARE YOU WEAK AFTER SICKNESS?

Now Is the Time to Enrich Your Blood, Strengthen Your Nerves, and Get Real Well.

You can profitably take a page from the volume of Mrs. Geo. E. Amarilla's experience—she has been through the mill—she knows. "The many months of almost useless depression, the nervous fears, and the sleepless nights I might have prevented—to think of them is almost enough to make me ill again. A little care and just a simple remedy at first would have averted a long serious illness.

"In the spring, two years ago, I had typhoid fever. I gained in weight, but my flesh was puffy, and my strength feeble. I was easily tired, and my color not good. But I depended in a hitherto rugged constitution to right itself, and kept on doing more than I ought. The outcome was collapse of a nervous character. From the improvement 'Ferrozone' has made, giving me strength, color, and endurance, it is reasonably certain that had I used it when I first felt poorly my strength would speedily have been restored. I can strongly urge those recovering from illness, those who feel ill, in fact everyone who needs better health can quickly gain it by using Ferrozone."

Ferrozone Builds Up, Strengthens

It's because Ferrozone converts what you eat into nourishment, because it contains blood-making and nerve-strengthening qualities. These are the reasons why it builds up the weak and cures the sick. Try one or two Ferrozone Tablets with your meals, and watch the gain. Fifty cents per box, six for $2.50, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

Curiosities of Superstition.

When Egypt was in the height of her power, when she was most highly civilized and delighted in being called the mistress of the land and sea, her people worshiped a black bull. There was some discrimination, however, even in this form of worship. In order to be an object of mad adoration it was necessary that the bull calf be born with a circular white spot in the exact center of his forehead, and the advent of such a creature in any herd was the signal of wild demonstrations from the Mediterranean to the border of the Lybian desert. Even as late as the time of Cleopatra, star eyed goddess, glorious sorceress of the Nile, such animals were shod with gold and had their horns tipped with the same metal. Herodotus tells of a man who died with grief because he sold a cow that soon after became the mother of a black bull calf marked with the sacred white circle in his forehead.

Lead Pencil Experiments.

An English statistician was asked how many words could be written with an English lead pencil, and, being determined to answer it, he bought a lead pencil and Scotts Evanhoe and proceeded to copy the latter word by word. He wrote 35,608 words and then was obliged to stop, for the pencil had become so short that he could not use it. A German statistician who heard of this experiment was dissatisfied with it because all the lead in the pencil was not used on the work, and therefore he bought a pencil and started to copy a long German novel. When the pencil was so short that he could not handle it with his fingers he attached a holder to it, and it is said that he wrote with this one pencil 400,000 words. Possibly, however, his pencil was longer or the lead in it was of a more durable quality.

When Silence Is Deadly.

Silence is commonly the slow poison used by those who mean to murder love. There is nothing violent about it. No shock is given. Hope is not abruptly strangled, but merely dreams of evil and fights with gradually stifling shadows. When the last convulsions come they are not terrific. The frame has been weakened for dissolution. Love dies like natural decay. It seems the kindest way of doing a cruel thing.—George Meredith.

Flags of War.

There has just been deposited in the archives department a number of flags which good Canadians will revere. They were borne by loyal men in the war of 1812, and, blood-besmeared and bullet-torn, are hanging on the walls of the new building, set aside as sacred to Canadian history.

The flags are those of the 4th and 5th Regiments of the incorporated militia of Upper Canada, the 100th Artillery, the Royal Emigrants, the 1st Canadian Regiment, the Quebec militia of 1775, and the Royal Engineers.

The flags of the 1st Regiment, the 4th Regiment, and the Quebec Militia are badly tattered and torn and indicate the severity of their engagements.

The two flags of the Royal Emigrants are curious. They are home-made, woven on small worsted square made, woven on small worsted squares, with poles of lances. All of the flags were given to Dr. Doughty's care by the Militia Department.

A Venturesome Countess.

The Countess of Minto, who, with her husband, narrowly escaped being killed by a bomb-thrower in India, has had several exciting adventures. Once she journeyed with her husband from Ottawa to Montreal in Canadian canoes and camped out at night, while on another occasion she startled Canada by riding on the cowcatcher of a locomotive in far-away Klondike, and seated on this dangerous perch, took a number of snapshots of the quickly-flying scenery. On another occasion the wing of the house in which she was sleeping caught fire, and she was only rescued in the nick of time by her husband.

WASHINGTON'S DECISION.

How the General Settled a Point of Military Law.

By EVAN C. MATHEWS.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"Where are you going, daughter?"

"I am going to skate down the river toward West Point to meet Jimmie."

This bit of dialogue occurred in a house located but a few hundred yards from Washington's headquarters at Newburg.

Colonel Cogswell hastened to headquarters, where he joined the general, who was busy over reports of assistants authorized to collect commissary and quartermaster's stores. Katherine, leaving the high ground, descended to the river bank, where she put on her skates, then, with her hands in her muff, skated gracefully southward.

Meanwhile James Muldrough, lieutenant in the Continental artillery, stationed at West Point, having been delayed by some details pertaining to his duties, started to meet his sweetheart. He had barely reached the village of Cornwall when he saw far in the distance a dim figure which the quick eye of love told him was Katherine. There was but one other person visible to him on the ice, and that was a man who had just started from the west bank and was pursuing a course directly across the river.

Then Muldrough saw something that filled him with horror. The girl's figure, while he looked at it, suddenly disappeared. There was no obstacle between him and her, and he knew that she had skated into a dreaded air hole. Too far from her to assist her, it seemed impossible that she should escape death unless it might be that she could get her hands on firm ice. There was scarcely a ray of hope.

But hold! The man crossing the river sees the accident. He is but a short distance from the point where she has fallen. He changes his direction and skates rapidly over the 500 yards that separate them. He lies flat on the ice, drags the girl out of the water and endeavors to stand her on her feet. Presently he succeeds, and the two hand in hand, skate northward, at first very slowly, then gradually increasing their pace.

The lieutenant understood all this. Katherine's clothing was soaked with ice water, and the only hope for her was to keep the blood moving through her veins by as violent exercise as she could stand. He was skating with all his strength, but they had preceded him by too long a start for him to overtake them. He called to them, but they did not hear him. He was not far behind them when, taking off their skates, they left the river and started up the incline toward Katherine's home. Following them, he entered the house just as the man who had performed the rescue was leaving it.

The two men stopped short, each looking at each other.

"Captain Abernathy!" exclaimed Muldrough.

"Lieutenant Muldrough, at your service," replied the other.

Captain Abernathy of his majesty's cavalry had been captured in the Ramapo valley a month before and had been confined as a prisoner of war at West Point. Lieutenant Muldrough had been in charge of the prisoners at the post, had befriended Abernathy, and the two, though on opposite sides of the struggle, had formed a warm friendship. Muldrough was astonished to see the British captain under the present circumstances, for he had supposed him to be in the military prison.

"How did you come here?" asked Muldrough.

"Found an opportunity for escape, and had I not turned aside to assist a lady"—

"And save a life," interrupted Muldrough.

"I would have by this afternoon been on board a man-of-war bearing the cross of St. George on her banner. In other words, I would no longer be a prisoner of war."

"Come in. My first business is to ascertain the condition of Miss Cogswell. I shall not forget that you have saved her life." A shadow passed over Muldrough's face as he remembered that it would be his duty to return to prison the man who but for saving that life—a life dearer than all the world to him—would have regained his freedom.

The two entered the house, where Muldrough asked anxiously after Katherine's condition, to learn that she was receiving proper attention.

Meanwhile Colonel Cogswell had learned of the accident and came hastening into the house. Having been informed that everything that could be done for his daughter was being done, he turned to the two men.

"Is it to you, sir," he asked Captain Abernathy, "that I owe my daughter's life?"

"It is, colonel," Muldrough said. "Without this gentleman's assistance our Katherine would now be in the river under the ice."

"And pray, sir," asked the colonel, "to whom am I indebted for this invaluable service?"

Captain Abernathy and Lieutenant Muldrough looked at each other. Then Abernathy said:

"I will not trouble Lieutenant Muldrough to tell you that. I am Captain George Abernathy of his majesty's service and a prisoner of war. This morning before daylight I found a loophole for escape, the sentry stationed at my door being dead tired and asleep. I walked out unobserved and under cover of the darkness skirted the river north of Fort Clinton. Traversing the pass through the mountains, I stopped after daylight at a house where I found a friendly Tory, who gave me breakfast and these citizen's clothes. I was crossing the river with a view to going down on the other side to board one of our men-of-war, below when I saw your daughter in peril. You know the rest."

While this brief explanation of how matters had come about was being given Colonel Cogswell's brow was darkening. He saw that the man to whom he was infinitely indebted, whom he would like to load with favors, must be sent back under guard to prison. Then, too, he remembered that the Continental army had suffered greatly from the work of spies, and recently orders had been issued that wherever such were found they should be tried by drumhead court martial and hanged. Captain Abernathy having changed his uniform for citizen's clothing brought him, according to the military code, under the letter of the law as a spy.

"Your service to me, sir, and to Lieutenant Muldrough," he said, "puts me under an obligation that is incalculable, but your kindly act has placed us in a painful position. Why, may I ask, did you not retain your uniform?"

"I could not have hoped to pass through territory in the hands of your troops in my dress as a British officer."

"Yet in assuming the dress of a civilian you risked a felon's death."

"I took my chances and lost."

Colonel Cogswell looked troubled. There was but one man who could rectify any damage that might have been done—the general in chief—and he had issued the order with reference to spies.

"There is but one hope for us," said the colonel gloomily, "and that is in the magnanimity of our noble general in chief. But what view he may take of the matter it is impossible to predict. Whether he will consider that the letter and not the spirit of his order has been violated, whether he will be willing to appear as one breaking his own law, no one but himself can decide. Come; let us go to him."

They were about to leave the room when a voice was heard at the head of the stairs:

"Papa, if it had not been for my preserver I would now be— Oh, it is horrible! I can't bear to think of it! If any harm comes to him I will never forgive you, even if you are my dear father. And you, Jimmie, if you let any trouble come to him you must give me up."

"Hush, darling!" said her father in infinite pain. "Keep quiet and keep warm. You should not have been permitted to overhear our conversation."

"I am glad," said the British captain, "that I have heard your daughter's words. If I must pay the penalty of the risk I assumed I shall be comforted by them."

The three men left the house and walked to the headquarters of the general in chief. Washington rose as they entered and, advancing to Colonel Cogswell, pressed his hand, asking eagerly after the condition of his daughter. After assuring the general that she was in no immediate danger he said:

"And now, general, I have to introduce the man who has preserved her to us, Captain George Abernathy of the British army."

General Washington's face, changed from sympathy to curiosity, then assumed a serious cast. "And how comes it," he asked, "that Captain Abernathy is not in uniform?"

"Lieutenant Muldrough," interposed the colonel, "will explain."

Muldrough told the story of Abernathy's capture, their friendship, Abernathy's escape and timely coming upon Katherine Cogswell. General Washington listened till he had finished, and the three men stood awaiting the general's decision. It did not come at once, but when it came it was spoken with the decision of a commander:

"Captain Abernathy, there is no evidence other than your clothing that you are a spy. There is sufficient evidence that you are not. I shall send a flag of truce to the commander in New York asking him to nominate one of our captains in his possession of the same rank as yours to be exchanged for you. Meanwhile I will accept your parole to remain with us, and I shall be happy to have you and Colonel Cogswell and Lieutenant Muldrough dine with me today."

Convinced.

"Do you think a college education helps a man in business?"

"Sure. I've had two college boys here workin' for me durin' the past year, and I was afraid to discharge either one of 'em for fear they'd find fault with my grammar when I done it."

Talk Killed a Bear.

"I suppose," said the barber to the man who was wearing a bear's claw on his watch chain—"I suppose you killed that bear yourself?"

"Yes, I did," was the reply.

"Was it a grizzly bear?"

"It was."

"A big one?"

"About the size of a two-year-old steer."

"Gee whiz! How many bullets did it take to kill him?"

"Not any at all."

"Brain him with an axe?"

"No; I talked him to death."

It took the customer fifteen minutes to get the rest of his shave, and during that time the barber didn't speak another word.

HIS LONG-DELAYED PROPOSAL.

French Story of Note in Bouquet That Was for Years Unanswered.

One of the longest delayed proposals on record is related in a French story of a shy young subaltern who was ordered away to the wars. Not daring to speak, he sent a nosegay of yellow roses to the girl he loved, with a little note inside begging her, if she returned his love, to wear one of the flowers in her breast that night at the ball. She appeared without it, and he went away broken-hearted.

Years afterward, when he was a lame old general, he again met his old love, now a white-haired widow. One day his old sweetheart gently asked him why he had never married. "Madam," he answered somewhat sternly, "you ought to know best. If you had not refused to answer that note in the bouquet of yellow roses I might have been a happier man." "The note in the bouquet!" she repeated, growing pale.

She opened an old cabinet and took out from a drawer a shriveled bouquet of what had been yellow roses, among whose leafless stalks lurked a scrap of paper yellow with age. "See! I never had your note," she said, holding the bouquet up. "If I had I would not have answered it as you fancied." "Then answer it now," said the gallant old soldier. And the long delayed proposal was accepted at last.

HAD TO BE IN PROPER FORM.

Without His Retaining Fee Young Lawyer Could Not Act.

An impecunious young lawyer recently received the following letter from a tailor to whom he was indebted:

"Dear Sir—Kindly advise me by return mail when I may expect a remittance from you in settlement of my account. Yours truly, J. Snippem."

The follower of Blackstone immediately replied:

"Dear Sir—I have your request for advice of a recent date, and beg leave to say that not having received any retainer from you I cannot act in the premises. Upon receipt of your check for $250 I shall be very glad to look the matter up for you and to acquaint you with the results of my investigations. I am, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servant, Barclay B. Coke."—Success Magazine.

The Conjurer Confesses.

That "the hand is quicker than the eye" is one of those accepted sayings invented by someone who knew nothing of conjuring—or, as is more likely, by some cunning conjurer who aimed still further to hoodwink a gullible public. The fact is that the best conjurer seldom makes a rapid motion, for that attracts attention, even though it be not understood. The true artist in this line is deliberate in every movement, and it is mainly by his acticus that he leads his audience to look not where they ought, but in an entirely different direction. Mr. David Devant, who for a number of consecutive years has entertained London with his ingenious tricks, has said: "The conjurer must be an actor. By the expression of his face, by his gestures, by the tone of his voice, in short, by his acting, he must produce his effects."—St. Nicholas.

Eve Was a Lunger.

Man still carries the original number of ribs, but he is short of a lung lobe. Where did he lose it? Eve got it. Man's right lung to-day consists of three lobes; man's left lung to-day consists of two lobes. Let us consider the missing lobe on the left. The lungs, mind you, are the life. Eve was made out of Adam's third lung lobe on the left, the lobe nearest the heart. She was constructed out of wind mostly. That is—she took part of Adam's breath away. Adam's posterity of the male persuasion in these latter days can count on only five lobes to both lungs; while Eve's daughters can count on seven; which accounts for woman having the last word in a controversy.—New York Press.

Reciprocity.

There is a little shop in Park place before the door of which is a small box. The top is fastened by a padlock. The key is kept in a hiding place known only to the man who keeps the shop, and to the postman. When the postman has a letter for that number he unlocks the little box, drops in the mail, finds a cigar, locks the box and proceeds on his way. This has been going on a long time. The man who keeps the shop lives over on Long Island. He has no clerk and comes to business whenever the spirit moves him.—New York Times.

Effect of Fear.

A vigorous young greengrocer, aged 27, was arrested recently on charges of drunkenness and assaulting a policeman, who was assisted in securing him a Mr. Lyons. Later, it was announced in court that Mr. Lyons was dead, and the greengrocer was remanded to see whether the coroner's jury would hold him in any responsible for the tragedy. It was found that Mr. Lyons' death was due to heart disease of long standing, but meanwhile the agonizing suspense had aged the prisoner terribly, his black hair having become completely white.—London Mail.

Looking After Business.

"I like this flat very well," she said. "I will be very glad to rent it to you," replied the landlord.

"But we have two children?"

"They need not interfere with you and your husband having the flat. I have a house two blocks down the street, which you can rent for the children and the nurse."

BOYS AND GIRLS

THE MAGIC HAND

JERRY AND TERRY

BY CHARLES BATTELL LOOMIS

HARRY KIMBERLY had three or four times in his childhood made small by touching them with his right hand and had then restored them to normal size by a touch of his left.

One afternoon on his way down to town with the horse and wagon he passed a Great Dane in a field with a Shetland pony and laughed to see that what was called an "enormous" dog was not quite so large as a "tiny" pony.

"How funny it would be," thought Harry, "if Terry was as large as Jerry and Jerry as small as Terry!"

Terry was his fox terrier, while Jerry was his father's faithful horse, an animal of some twenty summers and an equal number of each of the other seasons.

He no sooner had the thought than he chuckled to himself and whistled to Terry, who was scampering along, full of curiosity concerning everything.

Now, Harry had never increased the size of anything by touching it, except as he restored animals and men to their proper size after having made them small. Now he proposed to touch Terry and to wish him as big as Jerry—just for fun.

He stopped the horse and Terry came barking up to him, jumping about in a vain attempt to spring into the buggy. Harry got out of the wagon and laid his left hand on Terry and said, "Terry, I wish you were as big as Jerry."

To his delight the dog stood as high in the shoulders as Jerry in an instant, but he still retained the frolicsome spirit of a fox terrier, and went bounding up the road, barking in a voice of tenfold its usual power.

Harry laughed until he couldn't stand. He leaned against Jerry and said, "What do you think of that for a dog, Jerry, old man? Wouldn't he make a good lap dog?"

A tramp came out of a gateway, whistling carelessly. He looked up and saw the giant dog approaching him, and with a yell of dismay he fell in a heap in the path. Terry sniffed at him and barked once or twice in his ear, nearly deafening him, then rushed after a cat and made it rush up to the cross piece of a telegraph pole, where it stood with fluffed up tail, meowing at the monster of a dog.

"This won't do," said Harry, who was not very mischievous and who saw that his dog was in danger of being shot for a wild beast when he was really only an innocent "little dog" some fourteen hands high; so he called the dog to him.

"You're strong and big, Terry. How would you like to draw the wagon and let poor old Jerry have a holiday?"

Terry stood on his hind legs, put his enormous paws on Harry's shoulders and knocked him down, barking gayly all the while.

Harry rose to his feet laughing, and with a "Down, sir! Charge!" he proceeded to unharness Jerry. When the horse was free he shook himself and began to nibble grass.

"That's right, old man, have a good time. Terry'll do your work to-day."

It was quite a job to harness the dog, for terriers are not accustomed to standing still, and when the bit was put in his mouth he thought it a new kind of bone and tried to gnaw it.

The harness fitted him as if it had been made for him, all but the bridle; that had to be taken in. Harry threw the reins over the dashboard and was about to get into the wagon when it occurred to him that Jerry might like to ride to town.

"How'd you like to sit up here, Jerry, and see how it is to be pulled to town?"

Jerry was too busily engaged in eating to take any notice of Harry's question, so Harry went up to him, put his right hand on his shoulder and said:—"Jerry, I wish you were as small as Terry used to be."

On the instant there stood the smallest horse ever seen by mortal man. He went on cropping grass, for none of the animals ever seemed to be conscious that their size had been changed.

"Well, if you wouldn't win a prize at Harwinton Fair I miss my guess," said Harry, reaching down and picking up the tiny hoofed creature. Jerry resented to being lifted, kicked and struggled, but he was too small to do any damage, and Harry soon had him on the seat of the buggy. Then he took the reins and started Terry, who bolted off sideways after a bird and almost upset the wagon.

Every time he saw a cat or a squirrel he harnessed Terry made it fast, and on one occasion he ran right through a light gate, the buggy following, and stopped short in the front yard of an old woman who looked as if she had seen a ghost.

"He won't do any harm," said Harry.

"Any more harm, you mean," said the old woman, tartly. "That means a new gate, and I wish you'd keep your circus goats out."

Harry had five dollars in his pocket, which he gave to the old woman, saying to himself as he did so, "There goes my rifle."

He drove out again and by the use of the whip he managed to teach Terry that a pull on the right meant for him to turn in that direction, while a pull on the left meant the opposite.

And so they went to town, Terry lying quiet on the seat as if only too willing after a life of service.

Now, in Winston there was a terrier, owned by the butcher, and that dog loathed the sight of Terry, who on his part could not stand it to be in the same world with the butcher's dog and had several times tried to do him up.

It so happened that just as Harry was making a triumphal entry into town, feeling somewhat as if he were a whole circus; the people all stopping and staring and crowding toward him to make sure that their eyes were really telling the truth, and then being doubly puzzled at sight of the tiny horse on the seat—at just that moment the butcher's dog came out of the shop to take a stroll up the street, and Terry, seeing him, forgot in an instant that he was a draught animal and went pell mell after him, barking such barks as brought the entire population of that part of town to the windows.

Such organ tones you never heard on a dog; they made a trembling feeling possess one. Harry held on to the lines, but the lines meant nothing to the crazy beast in front of him, who was just now plain dog after his enemy. The wagon banged from one curb to the other. At almost the first jounce the tiny horse was thrown out, but calmly went to cropping grass.

Every dog in town joined in the chase, and the pursued terrier laid his head forward and went like a bolt through the air, hardly remembering to put his feet to the ground.

The end did not come until the terrier came to a corn crib on stilts and leaped in at the open door. Terry followed, and then there was neither corn crib nor wagon and Harry was lying in a litter of unhusked corn.

The terrier was dead. The buggy was a total wreck. Harry sat up and looked around. Terry, affectionate still, came over to him and began to lick his face with his big tongue.

"Back to your former size," said Harry, raising his right arm with difficulty.

"Ha, ha, broken! Served me right for trying to drive a terrier. But I guess I can lay my hand on you, doggy. Nice little doggy!"

He looked up at the great beast towering above him, then laid his hand on his thick shaggy ankle and wished him small.

There stood little Terry, parts of the harness sprawling on his back.

It would have been a sad day for Harry, with the knowledge that his father would have to buy a new buggy, if the boy had not thought that perhaps tiny Jerry might have some value in a circus, and he knew his father had talked of retiring him from active service.

Harry was right. The owner of the Consolidated Circus very willingly gave Mr. Kimberly a check for $1,000 for the "only horse that can cuddle up in a high hat," and he also promised that Jerry should have the best of care.

"I think, Harry," said Mr. Kimberly, "it'd be a little more careful how I used my power in future. Terry might have done some damage. He was looking at the remnant of the buggy that had just been brought home and both laughed.

"He might, daddums, but I'm glad I made Jerry small, for you are to after all."

DOLL'S DRESSING TABLES.

DOLLS' dressing tables are now made exactly like those for real persons, and while they are very expensive when bought all trimmed and draped in the stores, it is not at all difficult to make them at home at comparatively little cost. The big brother of the family and the big sister will no doubt be willing to help out a little, and if there are no big brothers and sisters there are usually uncles and aunts who will take their place.

To make a doll's dressing table it is necessary to have a rectangular table of doll size, a mirror and some dotted muslin barred muslin or other thin fabric; some lace and colored material, silk, silkoline or plain chintz for a lining.

The mirror may be rectangular, square or oval. It is not necessary that the frame be very good, because it is going to be covered in any event, so that it does not matter how much battered it is. The table also may be quite old and have all the paint and varnish worn off. If you have not these two articles in your possession they may both be bought quite cheaply or a rough four legged table is easily made by any boy accustomed to handling tools. The mirror is fastened to the table by two wooden strips tacked or nailed to the back of the frame and then to the back of the table.

The table top is first covered with the colored chintz, over which is placed the thin white material. A ruffle of the chintz covered with the white material is sewed to the table on the front and sides, leaving the back bare. This ruffle reaching the floor. At the top, where it is fastened to the table the fabric is concealed by a double frill of the white material, put on with small tacks whose heads are concealed by the folds.

The two materials are joined over the mirror. They are tacked in the middle of the mirror frame at the top and brought down at the sides, and there tacked again to the sides of the table or tied in with ribbon. The ends of these curtains then fall to the bottom of the dressing table.

Sometimes flowered chintz is used to drape the dressing table instead of this white stuff over a colored lining. The chintz is then finished with a narrow fringe, usually of white cotton.

On top of this dressing table are kept all of Miss Dolly's toilet articles, and nowadays she has quite as many of these as has a real person. It is true that sometimes her tooth brush is much too large to enter her rosy mouth, but then Miss Dolly has the great advantage of needing her tooth brush for ornament only, for her lily white teeth do perfectly well without it. On her dressing table are her hair brush and comb, clothes brush, powder box and puff, handkerchief case, smelling bottle, jewel case, in which are bracelets, chains, hair combs, &c., without number. There is also a tiny pin cushion, a long case for gloves, a silken gaily scented veil case, a hat pin holder, a catchall for stray bits of golden locks, &c. Indeed the dressing table of a fashionable doll is so crowded with her possessions that it is quite impossible to tell what they all are, unless one has studied them all quite carefully.

HOMES OF MANY LANDS---The Tepee of the Indian Child.

WHEN long ago the Pilgrims came to live here in this land
The Indians were savage and they were a hostile band.

They hunted in the forests and they fished in a canoe—
If you had been a Pilgrim just suppose they'd met with you!

You may be very thankful that you live at home to-day
And that you're not an Indian, to scalp folks in that way.

The paper wigwam is, indeed, a nicer thing by far
Than homes of savage Indians where small papooses are.

Cut out the picture on the black line XX. The little Indian figures at each side can be cut out and pasted on stiff paper. They may then be used for the color the tepee and the Indian children colors. The principal colors to use are and paste on the flaps, putting X under inhabitants of the tepee. If you wish to you may color with crayon or water yellow red and clear yellow.

which would prevent people from being harmed by poisonous food or drink. They also believed that it brought fertility to the land. And they met again New Year's Day to cut it down.

On that day a particularly large, handsome Druid, with a glistening white beard, came out of the forest, bearing in his hand, because they didn't consider it proper to approach the sacred mistletoe, which could do such wonderful things. Instead he would reach it in a pure white cloth and climb carefully, and with pure white bulls of the ceremonies attending them were over. Then the religious Druidical community felt that for the following year they would have all the good luck possible.

You see in those days New Year's celebrations were very serious affairs and all

"THE GEISHA" SURPRISED THE CRITICS IN TORONTO

To-day's Globe says:—The second night of the competitions at the Royal Alexandra Theatre for the Earl Grey musical and dramatic trophies afforded an instance of the unexpected happening. The surprise was the meritorious performance of the first act of "The Geisha" by the Peterborough Operatic Company. The outstanding features of the production were the singing of the chorus and of Miss Lavinia Haliban as Mimosa San. Miss Haliban has a really beautiful voice, of fine and even texture, and with no suspicion of that babyish quality that seems to be a disease with the leading ladies of the average musical comedy presentations of the past two years. The chorus won general praise for their musical work, especially in the finale of the act, their ensemble being sweet and well shaded. The Molly Seamore was Mrs. R. J. Devey, who has a pretty, if not brilliant voice, and who carried out her part with attraction. The other principal roles were taken as follows:—Marquis Imari, Nat Greenhalgh; Wun Hi, Mr. Maclaren; Lady Constance, Mrs. J. E. Firth; Reginald Fairfax, George Chandler; Captain Katana, Mr. Lee; Juliette Diamant, Miss Lillian Dean. As is usual with amateur companies, the men were more self-conscious than the women, and showed less freedom both in singing and acting. Mr. Howard Brockway, the American composer, who is one of the musical judges, expressed the opinion to the writer that no United States town of the same population as Peterborough could equal the performance. The act given was handsomely staged, and the costumes, with but few exceptions, were attractive.

FARMERS TO KEEP ON A-SMILING

Seeding is Being Rushed in Peterboro County—Ground is in Fine Shape

Seeding is well under way in Peterborough county, and if the weather continues favorable all the seed will be in the ground within two weeks. It is hardly necessary to say that the spring work this season is much more advanced than at the same time in other years. "In all my life I never saw the ground in better condition for working. In fact it was getting a little too dry and the rain to-day will have a most beneficial effect. The fields of fall wheat are wonderfully green and the pastures and meadows are coming along nicely."

It looks as if there were every reason for the farmers to keep on a-smiling.

GEISHA COMPANY HAD A GOOD TIME

Earl Grey Sent His Congratulations to the Conductor Mr, Devey

A happier party than the Peterborough Amateur Operatic Company made up yesterday, would be difficult to find. Mr. Mellroy, the C. P. R. ticket agent, made splendid arrangements for the comfort of the party both ways. On arriving at Toronto Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Devey, with Mr. R. S. Sturgeon, stage manager, met the train and whisked the party to most comfortable quarters at the Grand Union hotel, near the Royal Alexandra Theatre. A complete rehearsal at two o'clock over, the company dispersed to inspect the stores on Yonge street till dinner time, at six, after which Mr. Sutcliffe, the able business manager, hustled them over to the Royal Alexandra to prepare for the performance. As to that, the Toronto papers have something to say. Earl Grey came from the Royal box to personally congratulate the company, but they had all hastily retired to their dressing rooms to be in time for the train. His Excellency sent Col. Denison, the honorary secretary of the competition, to Mr. R. J. Devey to say that "the performance was one of the highest order, and he was more than pleased with it," the colonel adding his own personal congratulations. Whatever may be the result of the musical competition, the Geisha company furnished a complete surprise to last night's audience, for every number was encored, which the conductor was unable to allow, owing to lack of time.

LAID AT REST

Father Casey as sub-deacon. Interment took place at St. Peter's cemetery, the same clergy officiating at the grave.

GREAT BOY SOPRANA TO BE HEARD HERE

BOATS BEING BUILT FOR THE NORTHWEST

The Peterborough Canoe Co. received yesterday an order for the material and frame of a large motoor scow, be sent to a man in the Northwest, at a point south of Brandon. The vessel will be used on a lake for conveying picnic parties, etc., about the lake. The company is also building a 38 ft. power boat for exploration work in northern Alberta, and it will run from Fort McMurry to Athabasca Lake. The order was received on Good Friday and it will be shipped complete on May 1st. It will go by rail to Edmonton and from thence nearly 200 miles across the country on waggons. A car load of launches was shipped to Montreal and another car goes to Winnipeg the middle of the month.

$100 FINE IMPOSED

On Proprietor of Norwood House Who Pleaded Guilty to Having Sold Liquor

Yesterday the proprietor of the Norwood House, at Norwood, accompanied by Charles Williams, License Inspector for East Peterborough, came to the city, and before Magistrate Edmison, pleaded guilty to the charge preferred against him by the license inspector, that of having sold liquor on his premises. He was fined $100.00, with costs which amounted to about $12.00. Norwood is local option.

THE REGULAR RAIL-BIRD

The door leading to the police court from Water street opened not this morning, and the short, stout, "always on deck" regular turned sorrowfully away. It was not the first time he has been disappointed, for many years have passed since he first became a regular. During all this time the "nothing doing sign" hung out at ten o'clock in the morning, sometimes it has been for a week at a time, has not discouraged him. He has been always there, waiting. He wears the same clothes and the same expression, which resembles that of one of the ancient Spanish buccaneer. No matter how great is the crowd he always secures a prominent seat on the rail-birds' row. No murmur or comment passes his lips whether the unlucky prisoner is discharged, or given a long sentence. He sits there until the order, "Court is adjourned" is given out, and then with a shambling gait and a half dismayed look at his surroundings—even he notices them—returns down the stairs and goes back to his only other haunt to await another session of the court.

Some future day he will not put in an appearance, but his passing will not go unnoticed.

A Wealthy Class of Settlers

A dispatch from Scott, Sask., says:—Thirty-three cars of settlers' effects arrived at Scott, Sask., to-day from points in the United States and a second train of thirty-two cars will reach that point to-morrow. This represents the effects of six hundred and ten settlers who have in cash and personal property in their possession an average of ten thousand dollars each. These settlers are going to Tramping Lake district, south of Scott, on the Grand Trunk Railway.

BY THE WAY

As Bill Nye used to remark, a man's dog will be greatly attached to him now, by means of a leash.

Wonder what will happen when you get a hundred pound dog on one end of a leash and a seventy-five pound boy on the other.

There is talk of restricting cats from running at large. Let the council do it meow.

It has been suggested that a claws about the cats be added to the dog by-law.

Some of the surplus power at the new dam might be used to hurry along the settlement of the question.

Why not place a pig in the Riverdale Zoo at Toronto? Hogs are about the rarest thing in the country these days and appear likely to become extinct.

An expert is a man who makes a bluff at knowing more than you do.

A fire in the Hebrew quarters in New York is said to have been caused by friction. Probably a ten thousand insurance policy rubbing against an eight thousand dollar stock.

"Suckers are running" says a rural correspondent. Down in New York, where they are having Marathons the suckers are onlookers at the running.

NOTES OF THE DAY

The old naval cottages on the R.M.C. grounds at Kingston are to be demolished.

The St. Lawrence is now clear of ice from Quebec to the Gulf.

Mrs. J. P. Parker, of Stratford, was tied to a stove leg and robbed of $8, by two men who called at the house on Saturday.

George Parsons, of Brantford, was found dead after being seen in a despondent mood, and it is believed he took mercury.

Deathly Cramps, Stomach was Bloated

A Bad Case That Proves Cramps and Stomach Disorders are Cured Fast by Nerviline.

"The distress I suffered from cramps last summer was so severe I thought it meant death," writes P. R. Emerson, of Guys Hill, P. O. "I was doubled up with pain and in such bad shape I couldn't walk a hundred feet. I remembered having Nerviline on hand and took half a teaspoonful in sweetened water. In five minutes I was well and my stomach derangements disappeared entirely."

NERVILINE AN INSTANT RELIEF

For cramps, flatulence, diarrhoea and disorders of the stomach and bowels, Nerviline knows no equal—one million bottles used every year—fifty years on the market, that's proof enough of its merit. Large bottles, 50c., trial size, 25c. All dealers or The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

BOYHOOD MEMORIES

The following poem by Mr. J. R. McCrea, of Winnipeg, has been received by the Review from Mr. J. H. Cruikshank, of Toronto. Mr. Cruikshank says:—

About one mile north of the village of Keene at the head of the canal, from which the Keene mills get their power, flows what is known to people of Keene, "as up at the dam." It was here Mr. McCrea learned the art of swimming, and not only he, but hundreds of others, for Keene has, I believe, turned out more good swimmers than any village in the county of Peterborough.

The poem follows:—

THE OLD SWIMMING PLACE,
By J. R. McCrea,
Winnipeg.

With a roar and a rush the wild waters flush
Through the gate at the head of the race,
Then with laughter and song go dancing along
To their tryst at the old swimming place.

There as though loath to leave, as though they would grieve
To be drawn from its closer embrace,
They with tender lips press a gentle caress
On the banks of the old swimming place.

And the morning winds moan, as they claim them their own,
Ere they fly through the stretches of space,
While the afternoon breeze tells the listening trees
Of its love for the old swimming place.

'Neath the plank flung across so gently they toss,
Source a ripple their surface displace,
As so closely they lie 'neath the calm summer sky
In the heart of the old swimming place.

From the bee and the bird a softer note's heard,
And their love in each accent you trace,
As each one essays to give voice to the praise
That is due to the old swimming place.

And the passage of time, nor the far distant clime
From our hearts can ever efface,
The days when as boys we tasted the joys
In the depths of the old swimming place.

HIGH-O-ME

Thats the Way to Pronounce Hyomei, the Money-Back Catarrh Cure

As doubt exists in the minds of many readers of the Review, let us say that the above is the proper pronunciation of America's most wonderful catarrh cure. Wm. Madill is the agent for Hyomei in Peterborough and he will sell you an inhaler, a bottle of Hyomei, and full instructions for use, for only $1.00.

And if it fails to cure acute or chronic catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, croup, hay fever or coughs and colds, he will give you your money back. The person who suffers with catarrh after such an offer as that, must like to snuffle, spit and wheeze, and be generally disgusting.

Read what Mr. Higginbotham, a respected citizen of Guelph, Ont., says of Hyomei.

"I have the best kind of reasons for giving Booth's Hyomei my hearty endorsement. I had suffered with an itching sensation in my throat, swelling of the nasal glands and glands leading to my eyes, in fact a genuine catarrh for several months. I used several remedies but received no relief until I used Booth's Hyomei. I am glad there is on sale a remedy that relieves like this one and also glad to endorse the use and speak a good word for Booth's Hyomei."—N. Higginbotham, 63 Queen street, Guelph, Ont.

MI-O-NA Cures Dyspepsia.

WM. MADILL.

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

HOUSE SPENDS WHOLE DAY ON THE ANTI-RACING BILL

J. B. McColl Moves an Amendment to Bill Which Will Have Effect of Reducing Racing in Canada to 100 Days—Is Being Taken up Again To-day.

Ottawa, April 7.—After a whole day devoted to the Miller bill to prevent race track betting, it begins to look as though a compromise will be reached. Several members who spoke declared their support for the bill as presented, but Hon. Clifford Sifton, although sympathizing with the objects desired, contended that it was going too far to imperil the large interests involved to the extent that would be done, and called for a compromise. J. B. McColl, one of the members of the investigating committee, who did not agree with the findings of the majority of the committee, late last night moved the adoption, an amended section 235, regarding betting. This W. F. Maclean pointed out, would reduce racing in Canada to less than 100 days in a year, whereas it has been twice that. He thought this offered a compromise substantial enough to be agreed upon by the House. The bill will be taken up again to-day.

When Mr. Miller launched his bill yesterday morning, he began quoting from the evidence taken before the special committee, and was interrupted by C. A. Wilson (Laval), who objected that evidence had not been printed in French, and that some of the members could not understand it. He asked for a ruling from the Speaker whether the evidence could be quoted.

Speaker Marcil said he had looked at authorities. There were none since Confederation, but before that time Speaker Turcotte had ruled on a similar question in relation to a bill that the point was well taken. However, on this evidence, he ruled against Mr. Wilson's point, on the ground of public policy. The ruling was challenged and on a vote the Speaker's decision was sustained by 99 to 95. Among the prominent English members that voted against sustaining the Speaker's ruling were: Harty, Russell, Meigs, Sealey, Allen, Porter, Lancaster, Barker, Doherty, Crosby, Macdonnel, Price, Wilcox, Worthington, Staples and Glen Campbell. Practically all of the French members voted against the Speaker. Sir Wilfrid and Mr. Borden voted in support of the ruling.

"We largely admit the statement that the thoroughbred is of advantage in the breeding of many kinds of horses," said Mr. Miller. "But the second statement that racing is necessary to maintain the thoroughbred we will not admit, although it is admitted that the race track is one of the means that is found useful in the development of the thoroughbred horses.

"The third statement that professional betting is necessary to maintain racing we absolutely deny and refuse to admit. To the fourth allegation that horse racing is the sport of kings and should not be prevented we say it has never been the desire or intention of the promoters of this bill to interfere with horse racing, and we do not think that the bill, if carried into effect will do away with horse racing."

E. A. Lancaster (Lincoln) asked if he did not think it would be fairer to read as little as possible of the evidence, or none at all, because only printed in one language, and Mr. Miller replied that there was not one member of the House who was unable to read it in the language in which it was printed.

Turning his attention to the thoroughbred horse, he quoted from the evidence of A. E. Dyment of Toronto, who said that as a result of the passing of the Hughes' anti-race track gambling law in New York State, the price of some race horses had dropped from $10,000 to $100. Mr. Miller considered this a strong argument that the race horse had no intrinsic value. It was of no use to the farmer.

J. B. McColl (Northumberland), one of the members of the special committee which dealt with the bill, presented the views of those who are opposed to the measure in its present form. No one was against the leading principles and features of the bill, but it was a drastic proposal to make it a crime to indulge in a certain course of conduct which is regarded by a large proportion of the people as being a harmless recreation. Horse racing had received the countenance of the rulers of Great Britain and of other great countries for centuries. Any legislation which would have the effect of abolishing it would be drastic and extreme. The bill would seriously affect the breeding of light horses as well as thoroughbreds, and would cause heavy losses to the jockey clubs and racing associations.

Oliver J. Wilcox (North Essex), a farmer who has bred some good horses, opposed the bill, which would militate against the holding of race meetings and would injure the business of horse breeding. The thoroughbred could only be made his best by racing him. This was his opinion, though he had never been on a race track in his life, and had never laid a bet with a bookmaker.

GENERAL VIEW OF CATANIA

MT ETNA IN ERUPTION

A recent dispatch from Catania, Italy, says:—Mount Etna is now in eruption. With the first signs of renewed activity flames and smoke burst from a new crater at Volta St. Gaicomb, between Castello and Albanelli. During the last few days there were more than twenty earth shocks, some of considerable severity.

Residents of the country within the radius of the spread of ashes from the mountain, especially in those sections where earthquakes of most severity are felt, were in great fear and those near the mountain are in danger.

Mount Etna is the grandest of European volcanoes and has a well earned reputation for destructive outbursts. More than a hundred eruptions of more or less violence are recorded in its history. It has been built up by ages of intense activity on a colossal scale, covering a larger area than Vesuvius, and at times exceeding the latter in the volume of its lava discharges.

WALTER ROSS ON TRIAL AT NORTH BAY FOR MURDER

Prisoner's Story of Tragedy at Ranmore Last Winter is That He and the Dead Man Had a Dispute About a Claim and When Parkinson Tried to Attack Him With an Axe He Shot.

North Bay, April 7.—Walter Ross was placed on trial yesterday morning for the murder of Percy Parkington at Ranmore, Dec. 9 last. The prisoner being without funds, Tw. W. McGarry, assisted by G. L. T. Bull, was assigned to defend him. The case is not yet concluded.

Many tilts between the counsel, Messrs. Blackstock and McGarry, gave the case added interest yesterday, as the defence is fighting every inch of the way. A. T. Rowell, provincial constable at Matheson told the story of the tragedy, as related to him by Ross, who gave himself up on the night of Dec. 9 last. The constable was acquainted with both Ross and Parkinson, the latter being a quiet inoffensive man of slight physique. Both were living in a shack near Ranmore, a flag station on the T. & N. O. Ry., 195 miles north of North Bay, engaged prospecting.

Ross' story was that the men had words that morning over mining claims in which both were interested, culminating in an altercation, when Parkinson advanced toward him with uplifted axe, and saying "Damn you, I will fix you."

Parkinson advanced, despite Ross' demand for him to stop, and, having his rifle in his hand, he shot him. According to Ross, the shooting occurred between nine and ten, on the morning of the ninth of December last.

Constable Rowell visited the shack, making careful examination and measurements, and his evidence tended to show that Ross' story was peculiar. The seat of an overturned chair, near the entrance door, was covered with blood, a bullet was found embedded in the wall at a height of only two feet and nine inches from the floor; and a bullet had entered Parkinson's head, behind the right ear, taking an upward course and emerging from the left eye, tearing part of the face off.

Nine days before the shooting, Parkinson received $75, and had spent very little of this. The last heard of Parkinson alive was on the morning of Dec. 8, and that day Ross went to the house of Mr. and Mrs. Richards nearby, in the absence of Richards, and despite the protests of Mrs. Richards, stayed all day and all night. Previous to this, Ross had trouble with the Richards, and had been fined $25 and bound over the keep the peace and stay away. Ross paid an old board bill of $30 to Mrs. Richards, and gave the children a present of two dollars. The woman was afraid of him, as he carried his rifle, and begged him to leave, but he persisted in remaining, saying that Parkinson was away, and that there was no wood in the shack.

Evidence will be introduced by the crown tending to show that the shooting took place the day before Ross said it did. No money was found on Parkinson's body, and the constable swears that one pocket was turned inside out.

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY IN LITTLE VILLAGE OF WEISSENBERG

Albert Adams, a Well-to-Do Blacksmith, After Quarrelling With His Wife for the Past Week, Shoots Her and Turns Revolver on Himself.

Guelph, April 7.—Albert Adams, a well-known and well-to-do blacksmith at Weissenburg, a hamlet eight miles from Guelph, shot his wife yesterday afternoon, and a moment later turned the revolver upon himself.

The tragedy occurred about 4 o'clock in Adams' comfortable brick residence beside his shop. The only eye-witness was Louisa Hauck, a girl who had been hired for a few days to help with the house-cleaning, although in the yard, just outside the door, the three children, Mina, aged 10; Hughie, aged 7; and Harold, aged 5, continued playing, quite unconscious of the grim occurrence.

Adams, who had been quarrelling with his wife a good deal all week, and particularly yesterday morning, having been on one of his occasional sprees, left for Guelph at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, and bought a new 32-calibre five-chamber revolver. Upon his return he found his wife and Miss Hauck in the kitchen, busy wall papering. He sat in the corner a short time without saying anything. The women paid no heed to him.

"Have you nothing to say to me?" he asked his wife. Whereat the girl replied they were too busy to talk.

"Well, it's now or never," said Adams, and walking between the two women, he drew the revolver from his coat pocket and, pressing it against his wife's chest, fired.

The bullet entered a little too high to reach the heart, but punctured the large artery. Turning from him, the wounded woman ran from the house, through the front gate and along the road a distance of over 100 feet to the C.P.R. crossing, screaming that she was shot, and calling for help. At the crossing she turned, but the internal bleeding weakened her so that she fell to the ground, some 15 yards from the gate.

Louisa Hauck, after the shot was fired, and fearing that Adams might turn upon her, ran out the back door to Roth's Hotel, calling for help. Hearing Mrs. Adams' cries, she ran to where she was, and, wetting her apron, bathed the dying woman's head until she died, with the words, "He has shot me; I am dying; call the priest."

Just as Miss Hauck was rushing from the house she heard another shot, probably the one with which Adams took his own life, though he may have fired again at his wife, as she was running up the road.

Dr. P. J. Kirby of New Germany, and Rev. Father Foester of the same place, arrived soon afterwards. They found Mrs. Adams dead under the hedge, and in the kitchen the prostrate body of Adams, with a wound in his chest, in almost exactly the same spot as that which killed his wife.

In the revolver on the floor, a few feet from his hand, was three exploded cartridges, and two still unfired. The children by this time were crying and running back and forth between the prostrate bodies.

Major H. D. Merewether, high constable of Wellington County, and Constable Young, made an examination of the premises and sent for Coroner McLean of Guelph.

The house and shop were owned by Adams, and all paid for. He had some money in the bank, and was comfortably situated. He was a good mechanic. His failings were a weakness for drink, and when drunk a bad temper. At other times he was a good husband.

Father Foester said that the hotelkeeper in Weissenburg had refused for the past year or so to give Adams whisky, but that he had made a practice of keeping plenty of hard cider in his cellar, and it had almost the same effect upon him.

Albert Adams was about 38 years of age, and was a son of the late Ignatius Adams of New Germany. He is survived by two brothers, Joseph Adams of Toronto and Ignatius Adams, who lives on the old homestead. There are five sisters, Mrs. M. Brohman of Winterburne, Mrs. Adam Starr of Preston, Mrs. Wm. Ott and Mrs. Charles Smith, both of Berlin.

Mrs. Adams was Mary, the eldest daughter of the late Henry Reinhart of New Germany, and she was also very well connected in this district. Mrs. Haenel of Guelph is a sister.

AN ARREST IN LONDON

Jack Prodgers Jailed on Suspicion in Connection With the Frank Case.

London, April 7.—Jack Prodgers was yesterday afternoon arrested in connection with the attack Tuesday on Miss Frank at her home on the Wellington road.

The clue which cast suspicion on Prodgers was furnished by Robert Bremner of 122 Adelaide street, to whose door Prodgers came on Tuesday night, bareheaded, and asked for a hat. Bremner gave him the choice of two, and he took one. The man who attacked Miss Frank fled without his hat, which was found on the grass at the door, where the struggle took place.

Prodgers is a well-known character about the city. He was formerly a bartender. He has a known police record, dating back to 1898, when he was brought up in connection with the brutal treatment of an old man. A colored man, John Harris, was also a defendant in this case. In 1905 Prodgers was convicted of stealing in this city. He has also been in court several times for being drunk.

He is about 35 years old, and has been living at 17 Albion Block. He is a dark-complexioned man, about five feet six inches in height.

Bremner identified Prodgers as the man to whom he had given a hat. The charge against him to-day is "shooting with intent to kill."

The prisoner has not been taken to Miss Frank for possible identification, as the police state she is too ill for such an ordeal. Her physician states that she is suffering greatly from shock, two of her wounds may lead to blood-poisoning, and her condition is generally critical.

Prodgers first denied that he was the man to whom Bremner gave the hat.

POWER FOR OTHER INDUSTRIES

That Peterborough will have the new works of the Canadian General Electric Company is now certain, but we must have other new industries also, and it is important that there should be cheap power for them. The Board of Trade should have a report prepared on the power possibilities within transmittable distance of Peterborough, and then consider the best means of securing their development.

GOOD SENSE OF WATER COMMISSIONERS

The impression generally prevailed in Peterborough that there was danger that the Water Commissioners might force the Canadian General Electric Company to build their new works in Toronto by asking an exorbitant price for power, but the Water Commissioners have shown that they are men of good sense. The City Council and the Water Commissioners have agreed upon a proposal which is as near to the offer made by the Canadian General Electric Company that there can be no doubt that the company will accept it.

The next step is to draft the contract, and the Water Commissioners may be depended upon to fully protect the city.

THOMAS D'ARCY McGEE

Forty-two years ago to-day all Canada was aflame with indignation over the murder of Thomas D'Arcy McGee, who was one of the founders of the Canadian Confederation, and one of the greatest and noblest statesmen who ever lived in any country. He was assassinated by a Fenian, Patrick James Whalen, on his way from the House of Parliament, after delivering one of his most eloquent speeches in favor of Canadian Confederation.

If he had lived until the present time D'Arcy McGee would now have been eighty-five years of age. What he would have accomplished for Canada and the Empire if he had lived to old age can only be guessed, but there is reason to believe that his life would have been largely devoted to bringing about harmonious relations between the people of different races and religions who inhabit Canada. He said on one occasion addressing a Montreal audience:

"The result of my observation is that there is nothing more to be dreaded in this country than feuds from religion and nationality. On the other hand the one thing needful for making Canada the happiest of homes is to rub down all sharp angles and to remove those asperities which divide our people on questions of origin and religious profession. There are in all origins men, good, bad and indifferent; yet, for my own part, my experience is that in all classes the good predominates. In Canada, with men of all origins and all kinds of culture, if we do not bear and forbear, if we do not get rid of old quarrels, but on the contrary, make fresh ones—if we will carefully convey across the Atlantic half-extinguished embers of strife in order that we may by them light up the flames of our inflammable forests; if each of us will try not only to nurse up old animosities, but to invent new grounds of hostility to his neighbor; then gentlemen, we shall return to a state of war. In society we must sacrifice something as we do when we go through a crowd, and not only must we yield to old age, to the fairer and better sex, and to that youth which is its weakness is entitled to some of the respect which we accord to age, but we must sometimes make way for men like ourselves, though we could prove by the most faultless syllogism our right to push them from the path."

He made many other speeches advocating peace and good will between the English, Scotch, Irish and French elements of the Canadian nation.

Although not born in Canada he became a true Canadian in feeling. He was enthusiastic about the future of Canada and his speeches read to-day like prophecies. He lectured in Upper Canada, Lower Canada and the Maritime Provinces, always setting forth the advantages of union and the great commercial future that would be assured to the country if a railway were constructed through British territory connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Although in his boyish days he was an active member of the Young Ireland Party and an advocate of Irish separation from England, as he grew older he became thoroughly loyal to the British Empire. His loyal speeches incensed the Fenians of the United States, and Patrick Whalen, a misguided Fenian, came over the border to kill him.

He was a statesman of whom all future generations of Irishmen and of Canadians will have reason to be proud. His words of peace and goodwill should be taken into the hearts of Canadians of the present time. If that spirit of conciliation which animated D'Arcy McGee and Sir John Macdonald inspired every politician today half the difficulties of the political situation would disappear.

A RAILWAY TO THE NORTH

Now that the City Council, the Water Commissioners and the Board of Trade have agreed upon the policy to be adopted in reference to the Canadian General Electric Company's proposal to lease the power privileges at the waterworks dam, other matters of importance to the city may be taken up. We would suggest that the public men of Peterborough should next consider the question of improved transportation facilities, and especially the proposals that have recently been made for a railway to the north.

A correspondent of the Review, some weeks ago, proposed that a railway should be constructed, running north from Peterborough through Burleigh, Apsley, Wilberforce, Whitney and Mattawa and then across to some point on the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway.

A meeting of Apsley citizens, favorable to this proposal, was held the other day, and an Apsley correspondent of the Review suggests that there should be another meeting in that place, to which the leading citizens of Peterborough should be invited. In a letter to the Review he has pointed out that the railway would carry a stream of tourists through Peterborough to the lakes, that it would develop a large traffic in timber and minerals, and that the output of farm products would be largely increased if there were proper facilities for getting things to market.

It will certainly be wise for the Peterborough City Council and the Board of Trade to earnestly consider this railway question. A trip might be made through the district it is proposed to tap.

Our correspondent is right in saying that railways make traffic for themselves, provided the natural resources are there to be developed. In this age of railways, neither capital nor population can be secured by any district, unless it has railways.

CRAWFORD IN KILTS.

The Novelist's Remark When He Saw Himself as a Child.

One of the best known guides in the capitol at Washington used to be Colonel Jasper E. Snow, formerly a Kansas City lawyer, who always sat in Republican conventions and voted for Blaine as long as there was a Blaine to vote for.

Colonel Snow used to tell this little story of the late Marion Crawford.

He had met Mr. Crawford in Florence, Italy, and when the novelist came to Washington Colonel Snow was the first person who showed him the doors made by the novelist's father, Thomas Crawford.

These are the senate bronze doors on the eastern portico. They represent scenes connected with the Revolution and the founding of the government.

The panel representing Washington's reception at Trenton when on his way to his inauguration in New York contains among the populace portrait figures of the sculptor, his wife, his three children and Randolph Rogers, the sculptor of the main doors of the capitol.

The novelist, who had never seen the doors before, quickly identified his mother and father.

"Yes," said he, "mother used to wear her hair just like that."

Then, gazing at the largest child, a fauntleroyish figure in kilt, with long flowing hair, he added speculatively:

"But I wonder if I ever really did look like that."

A DUCK HARD TO KILL.

The Screaming Walloon Is Something of a Diver Too.

The screaming walloon is a hard duck to kill. Its hide is very tough and is thickly covered with feathers and down. Besides, the bird is a great diver, one of the kind that used to "dive at the flash" when hunted with the old arm that flashed when fired. It is of very little value for table use, being so tough. The only way to manage it at all is to skin it and parboil it in a big pot with plenty of water. The negroes make caps of walloon skins.

"They are great ducks for diving," says a well known Tred Avon river progger. "They can dive quicker, go down deeper, remain under water longer and come up farther away than any other duck that frequents our waters. I remember once I succeeded in killing a walloon, and, being short of game for the table, I determined to cook my bird. I got a negro to skin it, giving him the hide for his trouble. After being cleaned we put it in a great pot full of water and under it kindled a hot fire. After awhile I wanted to see how the cooking of my duck progressed and lifted the top off the boiling pot, but there was so much steam escaping I could not see into the pot and struck a match over it. The blamed walloon, sir, dived at the flash of the match. It disappeared and has never been seen since."

To Start a Tight Screw.

Lots of folks have tried to remove a stubborn screw from a piece of wood, a screw that won't budge at all, and have in the end given it up as a bad job. Well, if such a thing occurs again don't give it up, don't lose your temper or exert yourself, but try this recipe for removing the screw: Heat a poker red hot and then hold it against the screw head for a little while; wait a few minutes for the screw to cool down, when it will be found that the screw can be removed quite easily with the same screwdriver that just previously would not perform the work. The explanation is quite simple. The red hot poker heats the screw, and the screw expands and makes the hole it is in just a wee bit bigger. The screw then cools down and resumes its original size, leaving the hole in the wood a size too large—and there you are.

Interesting For the Husband.

A tidied lady warned her new gardener that her husband had an irritating habit of disparaging everything he saw in the greenhouse and of ordering in a reckless manner new plants to be bought.

"But on no account humor him," she said. "Whatever he says, throw cold water on him or he will ruin us with his extravagance."

At this point the new gardener turned on her a white and startled face.

"Ma'am," he said, "if he orders me to pitch every plant in the place on the rubbish heap I shan't ever have the pluck to douse him in cold water. Won't it do as well if I get a drain of warm water out of the boiler and let it trickle gently down his neck?"—London Tit-Bits.

Very Thoughtful.

"Before we were married," said Mr. Meekton, "I showed my affection for Henrietta by serenading her."

"I suppose you neglect any such attentions now."

"Yes; I show my affection now by respecting her desire that I shall not try to sing."

The Only Way.

"I wish I knew how to keep a servant."

"That man across the way can help you."

"Does he conduct an intelligence office?"

"No; he's an embalmer."—Houston Post.

Limited Experience.

Gentleman (hiring valet)—Then I understand you to have some knowledge of barbering. You've cut hair off and on? Applicant—Off, sir, but never on."—Boston Standard.

Robert Coyle, jr., of Colborne, apple exporter, was fined $100 and costs for changing the marks on a shipment of apples.

The Giant's Strength

...By...
BASIL KING,
Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"Well, I suppose we don't, except from such people as Lady Alice and the duke, who've been his friends nearly all his life. As for his ability, the newspapers have witnessed to it abundantly. Then, too," she mused on, "it would create a great revolution of feeling at home, though you wouldn't care anything about that. Just as you've been indifferent to slander, you'd be equally so to applause."

"Applause—how?"

"Don't you see that it would be looked upon as so splendid and superior and American that your daughter, who had dukes and princes at her feet, should choose to marry a poor man, not only one of our own countrymen, but the son of one of your defeated enemies? Of course it would mean nothing to you, but we weak women of the family couldn't but rejoice that the world should see you in your true light—in your simplicity and generosity and in your great sense of the true responsibility of wealth. Your traducers would be obliged to stop their attacks, for there'd be no more powder in their magazine. I don't know anything about it, Uncle Trafford. That's only the way I feel."

"Ah, well!" he sighed. "Ah, well!"

He rose and took two or three strides up and down the room.

"Ah, well!" he sighed again. "I don't mind admitting to you, Laura, that I'm miserable about the whole business. When I think of that dear child crying her brave eyes out, perhaps at this very moment"—

"Yes, I know," Laura interrupted. "Then you'd make any sacrifice to save her."

She felt she had said enough, for she, too, rose and folded her work.

"Won't you come and see Paul have his supper?" she suggested. She knew he liked to see the boy kick and crow and splutter and beat with his spoon on the table.

"No, I don't believe I will," he replied wearily. "I seem to have had enough of children. I begin to wish the Lord had never made them."

"If he hadn't, you'd be the first to pray him to begin," she smiled as she turned at the door to leave him. "You know better than I do that for Paula's sake you'd throw everything you've ever won to the winds."

"I suppose that's true," he murmured to himself as he went along the corridor to his office. "I suppose that's true. That wife of George's is a clear headed little woman, and she doesn't know it."

Only a skillful psychologist could have followed the evolution of Paul Trafford's thoughts during the next forty-eight hours. Only a sympathetic insight could have disentangled the strands of love and self love, of ego ism and devotion, of passionate affection for his child and of impulse to make one more appeal to the great, easily hoodwinked public to indorse him as a high minded, honorable man.

"Life is only compromise after all," was one text on which he mused. "She'd go wild with joy; she'd love me more than ever," was another. "Laura was right. They would see me as I am—simple, generous, patriotic, caring nothing for honors or a big name, but only for sterling worth. They'd come to understand me at last." That was a fruitful theme of meditation. "Brave little brick! She doesn't care what happens to herself so long as I'm pleased and saved from being wounded again. God! I'd let myself be stabbed all over my body rather than that she should shed another tear." That was a subject on which he could dwell only with eyes blinking. "After all, I may be wrong to distrust the man. He may be less of a Winship than the rest of the lot."

It was the third day before he felt convinced that of all the chances against him he was accepting the least dangerous. It was the fourth before he felt sure enough to speak. He waited till evening, till the moment when Paula came to kiss him and say good night. He drew her to him and laughed with an air that was almost boyish in its embarrassment.

"I've given in," he stammered. "My little girl is to do as she likes."

She slipped from his embrace and fell back a pace or two.

"I—I don't understand, papa."

"Don't you? Then I'll make it clearer. I'm a weak and beaten and foolish old man. You'll see it," he went on—"you'll see it when I tell you that just as you're my daughter so Roger Winship shall be my son."

The little sob with which she threw herself into his arms was one of natural relief in the thought that the long strain was over.

CHAPTER XVI.

WINSHIP had finished his coffee in the long red studio before Marah brought hers and sat down beside him. Though money had been coming in as it had never come before, they had made no change in the simple habits of the days of poverty. Going to and fro in the room, Marah observed that her brother had received a letter which he read and reread with unusual absorption.

"Is it another commission?" she asked as she took her place.

"No," he answered absently, still pondering the page before him.

When some minutes had gone by she spoke again.

"It isn't anything that worries you, I hope?"

"Read," he said briefly, pushing the paper toward her. She took it and read:

Dear Mr. Winship—A great bereavement has recently come into both our families. Perhaps nothing so much as sorrow teaches us the true value of the things of this life. Since God has taken my dear wife from me, I at least have come to see many things from a different point of view. I am sure you will understand what I mean when I say that it would give great pleasure both to my family and myself to meet Miss Winship and you and to talk over matters of importance which must be discussed between us. May I ask, then, if tomorrow afternoon at 3 would suit your convenience to come to my house in the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne, where, as I have already said, we shall all be glad to see you? Believe me, dear sir, yours very truly, PAUL TRAFFORD.

P. S.—I beg to add that we lay particular stress on the presence of Miss Winship, as some of our topics of conversation will be of as much interest to her as to the rest of us.

The brother and sister looked at each other blankly.

"What does this mean?" Marah demanded at last.

"It means first of all that I have asked Paula Trafford to marry me."

"And then?"

"That she's consented."

"And then?"

"That they've all consented."

"And then?"

"And then," he cried, springing up, with a harsh laugh—"then it means that the day has come to which we've looked forward so long, when we can say to each other, as Deborah said to Barak, 'Up, for the Lord hath delivered him into your hands.'"

"I don't understand you. How has he delivered him?"

"Come and see."

"Very well. I'll go."

No more was said. The subject was difficult to speak of, but at 3 o'clock they presented themselves at the door of the great house.

Trafford himself met them at the foot of the grand stairway. Now that this step was definitely decided on he felt the satisfaction by which he was always thrilled in playing the benefactor or god from the machine. With a large share of the sentiment characteristic of the American man of business in his softer moods he had a distinct enjoyment of generosity, especially his own. He came forward with dignified cordiality and held out his hand. Winship took it with a certain gravity. Marah stood in the background, her eyes sparkling like two electric lamps.

"You're very good to have come," Trafford said in his kind tone. "I'm sure we shall all be glad to know one another better. And you, too, Miss Winship."

He advanced toward Marah and again held out his hand. She allowed hers to rest limply within his grasp, but left to her brother the task of finding a reply.

"The kindness of your letter made our coming imperative," Winship murmured politely.

It was all that could be said before the two tall footmen, and Trafford turned to lead the way upstairs. As they followed both brother and sister were impressed by the magnificence of their surroundings. It was beyond what they expected and recalled to the imagination a bit of the chateau of Versailles in the days of its greatness. Marah felt herself dwarfed by so much splendor, and it required a mental effort even on Winship's part to lift his personality above it.

Once inside the door of the great salon Marah stood timidly, waiting for the others to pass in and take the lead, when she became aware of a small lady in a long black train advancing with outstretched hand to meet her.

"I know this is Miss Winship," Laura said cheerily. "Our friend Lady Alice Holroyd has spoken of you so often. And Mr. Winship," she continued in the same easy strain. "This is my husband, George. Now we all know one another, don't we?"

George shook hands with the Winships in turn, saying, "How do you do?" to each. To this they found it a relief to be able to reply with the same noncommittal formula.

"Oh, Mr. Winship," Laura rattled on as the party moved a few paces toward the center of the room, "I can't tell you how much I admire your portrait of Paula. I've been to see it twice. Everybody says that nothing equal to it has appeared in the Salon during the last ten years. Now, do tell me," she pursued, eager to cover up the first few trying minutes, "didn't you paint that malachite table from the one in the Grand Trianon?"

"No," Winship smiled; "it's one I had the chance to sketch in the Quirinal palace in Rome. You see, I have a knack with marble surfaces, and so when I get an opportunity"—

"Shall we sit down?" Trafford asked, offering a seat to Marah.

A Buhl table with some gilded and tapestried armchairs about it seemed to offer a rallying point, and presently they were all seated. It was partly accident, partly instinctive grouping, that placed Winship and Marah together on one side, with the three Traffords facing them on the other. Laura felt that her power of taking the lead was now at an end. There were a few seconds of constraint before Trafford spoke. He looked directly at Winship and Marah, though his tone was that of a man musing aloud.

"Our meeting of this afternoon is of a kind that must make any thoughtful person believe in the directing finger of a higher Providence. The very strongest of us must be subject to his authority. In fact, I don't suppose that with him there are such things as strong or weak at all. We are simply his children, fulfilling his designs. It doesn't take much reflection to see that an old man is better occupied in sowing the blessings of peace than in continuing the wars of his youth. Mr. Winship, I believe you have asked my daughter to marry you?"

"I have."

"And that she's consented?"

"I've understood her so."

"Then I, too, consent. I don't pretend that I can give her away easily to any man. She's more than precious in my sight. But I realize that a day must come before many years are over when she will need other guardianship than mine. And where can she find it better than in the man who loves her and whom she loves and of whom every one speaks well?"

"I can only say," Winship murmured, "that to me the trust will be a sacred one. Her very sacrifice in marrying me will make it all the more my duty to see that she is compassed about with—love."

"I like that," Trafford said warmly. "Where there's love care and sorrow take their proper and subordinate place in the scheme of things. Mr. Winship, we're simple people, and I'm a plain man. It will be better for us all if I speak quite frankly and without reserve."

"That's what I should like," Winship agreed.

"We're simple people, but I think you'll find us open hearted people. We're a united family, and, with the necessary crosses such as fall to human lots, we've been a happy family. God has blessed me, even though he has seen fit to take from me all my children but my little youngest born, and now her mother too. Still, he has blessed me. I should be ungrateful to deny the fact after all he has enabled me to do. And just as, in my dear niece here, he has given me, as it were, another daughter, so I am ready to see in you an only son."

Winship bowed, and Trafford hurried on.

"You see, we want to take you in as one of ourselves. I want you to feel that in me you have a second father. I want Miss Winship to be one of us also, and," he continued, looking directly at Marah, with an encouraging smile, "I've taken certain steps which I hope will assure her of my unlimited good will."

He drew a small memorandum book from his pocket and began turning its pages. Marah sat bolt upright, with the rigidity of steel. Her snapping eyes were fixed on Trafford, like those of a little animal watching its minute to spring.

"It would be idle to ignore the fact," Trafford went on, "that it isn't the first time our interests have lain in the same field, even though it's the first time we meet. And yet I need hardly go back to speak of the past. I consider it dead and buried. I want to erect over its ashes today a monument of affection and peace. My dear Miss Winship, I beg to turn over to you now, at once, securities to the amount of half a million dollars."

"I beg to turn over to you securities to the amount of half a million dollars."

"Why?"

The laconic directness of Marah's question had a slightly disconcerting effect on Trafford's benevolent placidity.

"Surely that's self evident," he smiled in gentle response. "Your brother is about to marry my daughter. It wouldn't be fitting—you'll excuse me if I speak quite plainly—it wouldn't be quite fitting that you should remain in your circumstances while we are in ours."

"They've been my circumstances for over twenty years, Mr. Trafford. I've battled with them and borne them. I shouldn't be myself now in any others."

"But I want you to feel," Trafford persisted, "that there will no longer be any need for you to work"—

"I'm used to working," Marah broke in. "I've worked as few people have ever done. I've worked as I never expected to work in the days before—before you came into our lives, Mr. Trafford. I haven't only toiled and pinched and scraped; I've starved. I've seen my mother and my brother starving. I was only a girl not older than your daughter and not less tenderly nourished when you with your merciless hand drove me out, bewildered and penniless, into the world with the care of a mother and a little lad upon me. Now you are willing to erect over my ruined life a monument of affection and peace. I thank you, but I don't want it."

"Dear Miss Winship," Trafford said, still more gently, "do you think that the heart of a general whose duty it is to ravage some fair province doesn't often bleed for those whom he is obliged to render homeless? Business and war are alike in that neither conquered nor conqueror escapes without a wound."

"Men ruin in war for a country's sake. They rob in business for their own."

"You're using hard words, Miss Winship."

"I'm speaking of hard things. May I ask, Mr. Trafford, if my words aren't true?"

"Perhaps," Trafford said, with a patient smile, "we should be in danger of getting into an abstract discussion when our attention should be fixed on a particular point. I repeat that I'm glad to place this money at your disposal and should be still more glad to know that you accepted it."

"I couldn't do it. I should feel that I was buying prosperity at the cost of my father's life and my mother's twenty years of want."

"Then," Trafford said, losing some of his forced air of patience, "I see that this part of our discussion is useless, unless," he added, turning to Winship—"unless your brother can persuade you."

"I think my sister is quite right," Winship said quietly and with a certain air of detachment.

The three Traffords gave a simultaneous start, as if from a slight electric shock.

"You'll pardon me if I don't understand," Trafford began, rubbing his hand across his brow. "You come here to marry my daughter."

"I do."

"And you uphold your sister in refusing money that you yourself are willing to share."

"No. I never said so."

"But what? Upon my soul, I don't follow you."

It was clear that Trafford's courteous self possession was breaking down.

"My position," Winship said, "needs some explanation."

"So it would seem," Trafford assented dryly.

"I've tried to make Miss Trafford understand from the first that in marrying me she would be sharing a poor man's life."

"Humph! I doubt if she took that detail in."

"I think it quite possible. I've never had any real opportunity to place the matter in its true light before her. I've had almost no communication with her since the minute she promised to become my wife. Without your consent she refused to see me or even to let me write to her."

"And what might that true light be?"

"Only that I wish to marry her for herself and for herself alone. If she comes to me it will have to be without—money."

Trafford drew his chair closer to the buhl table, as though to diminish the distance between them, and fixed on Winship the look before which all other men had quailed. Winship, too, drew up his chair and returned the gaze with quiet steadiness.

"You wish me to understand, I presume," Trafford said, speaking slowly, "that your motives are quite disinterested. I'll do you the justice to say that I never questioned them."

"I should like you to understand a little more than that," Winship returned. "But, first, may I explain that the present situation is none of my seeking? Had I seen it coming I should have gone out of my way to avoid it. There seems to have been no means of doing that. Some fatality or some destiny has forced it on us all. If I had been given my choice, the last woman in the world whom I should have wished to marry would have been a child of yours."

"You're quite right to be frank," Trafford threw in, with a touch of irony.

"Thank you. I shall try to be so. May I go on with my explanation? It wasn't I who sought Miss Trafford out; neither was it she who sought me. She was impelled toward me by the knowledge that you had killed my father, impoverished my mother and blasted my sister's life."

To be Continued.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter." — MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

Catarrhal Deafness

Successfully Treated By

Catarrhozone

Deafness is not so common as blindness, yet thousands are more or less afflicted by it, and their comfort seriously interfered with.

Catarrhal deafness manifests itself but slowly, yet it must be acknowledged that the great majority of those who become totally deaf might have averted this unfortunate condition if they had treated the catarrhal inflammation at its beginning.

The only remedy that can be safely employed for all forms of catarrhal deafness is Catarrhozone. You simply charge the air you breathe with this healing, soothing agent, and by forcing it gently through the ears destroy the germ life which keeps up the inflammation, and at the same time by the soothing, healing action it heals the inflamed surfaces of the middle ear.

CATARRHOZONE, to those who are just a little deaf, and are growing increasingly deaf, is an agent capable of affording the utmost satisfaction, and its use is attended without danger, and as the treatment can be carried on at home no person threatened with the affliction of deafness should postpone one moment in beginning its use.

From every part of the Dominion glowing accounts of the beneficial action it exerts upon catarrhal conditions of the middle ear have been sent in, and you will be resorting to the only method of cure, and the simplest method too, if you try Catarrhozone. Dealers everywhere sell it, 25c, 50c, and $1.00. By mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Ont.

THE MORTGAGE TO BE BURNED

Y.W.C.A. Members Will Make Merry on Tuesday Next

A most pleasing event which marks the conclusion of a long and strenuous effort on the part of certain members—and more especially of one member—of the Board of the Young Women's Christian Association of Peterborough, will take place on the evening of Tuesday, April 12th, in the public department of the association building, when with due ceremony and proper rejoicing the mortgage on the building will be burned.

A fire has always a certain fascination for human beings, even when the results are disastrous, but in this case the work of the "good servant, but poor master," will have a special interest as it will remove a serious obstacle to the successful carrying on of the work of the association.

An unusually interesting programme has been arranged and the public are cordially invited to be present. Mayor Morrow will occupy the chair.

Mr. George H. Locke, M.A., librarian of the Toronto Public Library, will address the Peterborough Canadian Club to-night, his subject being "Books and Borrowers." Crisp Humor and Charms

The theatre-goers of this city will be delighted to learn that Joseph M. Weber's comedy drama "The Climax," by Edward Locke, with incidental music by Joseph Carl Breil, will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House to-night, April 7th. "The Climax" is a story of Bohemian life, and one whose freshness of idea, crisp humor and incessant charm will maintain it in high favor. The brightness of the lines, the wit, the seeming incongruity of the situation, and surely not least, a delightful little love story, is said to make the play entertaining in every way. COMMISSIONERS WILL ACCEPT THE C.G.E.'S PROPOSITION

As Result of Meeting of the City Council and Water Commission—Chairman Matthews Presents Commissioners' Statement—An Allowance for Reduction of Power Below 1000 H. P.

The crucial stage in the proceedings being carried on by the city in connection with the surplus power question was reached last night at the council meeting, at which the water commissioners met the city council and submitted a resolution drafted by them, after receiving their engineer's report. The commission will confer with the officials of the C.G.E., as the result of the meeting, the council requesting that they make the most advantageous terms possible in the interests of the city. This practically means that the C.G.E.'s latest proposition will be accepted.

Mayor Morrow was in the chair and all the members of the council and the water commission were present.

The mayor explained that the object of the meeting was to hear the statement of the water commissioners and to act on any suggestions that might be made.

Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the water commission, stated that the commissioners had been waiting some time to get the report of Mr. Kennedy, C.E., of Montreal, concerning the power situation relative to the new dam and regarding the price of power at other places. The commission had come to the conclusion that the power was worth more than the C.G.E. had offered for it. A resolution as follows was passed by the commissioners yesterday, and was submitted by Mr. Matthews at last night's meeting:

That the commissioners inform the city council that they are willing to dispose of the surplus water power at the new dam for a period of twenty years on the following general terms: The commissioners to reserve the right to use such quantity of power as may be required for waterworks purposes, and the purchaser to pay $2,000 a year and erect the building for the power station, and furnish and instal the machinery to develop such surplus power; and in addition to the $2,000 a year the building and all the machinery and appliances erected or placed on the property to become the property of the city at the end of the period; the agreement to contain proper and sufficient provisions to safeguard the interests of the city as to the character of the building and machinery and their maintenance, the control of the dam, and in all other respects as advised, and also a provision that if the commissioners use more than 500 horse power at other than times of fire and by so doing reduce the power available for the use of the purchaser below 1,000 horse power, the purchaser shall be under an allowance therefor. It is strongly recommended that a satisfactory arrangement be made for the public lighting of the city, concurrent to an arrangement for the sale of the power.

On motion of Ald. Turner and Ald. Buller, the resolution was accepted as read.

Mr. Matthews thought that before tying up the power some arrangement should be made for the lighting of the city. Mr. Matthews said that the engineer stated that only 500 h.p. would be required for waterworks purposes for 25 years, and then 1,600 could be developed if necessary.

Ald. Hicks said that while there may have been different opinions as to what could be done with the power, when the matter was simmered down the council and commissioners wanted to do what was best in the interests of the city. He thought the matter would be well looked after when left in the hands of the water commissioners.

The following motion was made by Ald. Turner, seconded by Ald. Buller, and was carried:

That it having been represented to this council that the Canadian General Electric Company, owing to its increasing business, requires to erect additional buildings and plant, and to obtain more electric power for the efficient operation of same, and contemplates the expenditure of at least $250,000 for said buildings and equipments in the city, provided said additional power can be obtained; and as the new waterworks dam is capable of developing more power than will be required for water works purposes, it would be in the interest of the city that such surplus power should be utilized, and made revenue producing. But for this purpose it would be necessary to construct and equip a power house at the said dam at a large expense, and it is at present doubtful if the same were done that the power could be disposed of, and the said company has proposed to the council that if the said surplus power be granted to it for a period of 20 years, that the company would pay for the same the sum of $2,000 per year, and would construct the necessary power house, and put in the plant required, for the development and use of such power—which arrangement will ensure a steady and fair revenue to the city for the use of this power that otherwise might be unused.

This council, therefore, requests the Peterborough water commissioners to enter into an agreement with the said company for the development and use by the company of the said surplus power on such terms as will protect the interests of the city and not interfere with the proper and sufficient supply of power necessary for the present purposes of the water commissioners and providing that the said power house and plant will, at the end of said term of twenty years, become the absolute property of the city of Peterborough without payment to the company of anything therefore.

Ald. Turner said that Mr. E. G. Patterson had promised that the plant at the dam would be lighted gratis if the company's offer was accepted.

Ald. Metheral raised the point of making some provision for the lighting of the town with the Peterborough Light and Power Co. before all the surplus power was disposed of.

Both Ald. Turner and Mayor Morrow were of the strong opinion that there would be opposition to the company before the present contract expired, and that it would be renewed on good terms.

CONROY BROS. ASKED THAT WATER IN RIVER BE LOWERED

By Hydraulic Power Co. and Quaker Oats in Order That Work on the Smith St. Bridge Could be Carried on—After Great Deal of Discussion Mr. J. H. Larmonth Consented to Power Committee to Reduce Level for Two Weeks

After the conference between the water commissioners and the city council was concluded last night, another interesting question, in which some rapid fire debating was done in the course of the refinement of the subject matter, came up for the consideration of the city fathers.

A communication from Conroy Bros., the contractors for the Smith street bridge, was placed before the council in which the contractors complained of their operations being seriously hampered owing to the Hydraulic Power Co. and Quaker Oats Co. refusing to lower the water in the river. Mr. Ed. Conroy was present as the complainant, and was represented by Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., and Mr. J. H. Larmonth was in attendance to present the other side of the argument.

Mr. Moore stated that the contractors were prevented from going on with their work on account of the water being kept at such a high level. At the time the contract was made with the city the contractors were given to understand that the water would be kept at a proper level. The same trouble as was existing at present had occurred last fall and the matter would have to be looked into at once. Mr. Moore said that both he and Mr. Conroy had spoken to Mr. Larmonth about the matter, but no agreement would be consented to by the latter. He thought the city should act and stated that the city engineer had told him that the water was higher by a foot than it should be.

The conditions of the contract between Conroy Bros. and the city, Mr. Moore held, intimated that the water might be reduced five feet if the occasion demanded it.

City Solicitor Hall stated that nothing was said in the contract to the effect that it was imperative that this should be done.

Mr. Moore said that the city had power to make the company reduce the water to normal level, which would bring it five feet lower than it was now. He said that the contract would have been pretty well completed by now if Mr. Conroy had had the advantages in carrying on the work he was entitled to.

City Solicitor Hall confirmed the accuracy of what Mr. Moore had said, and stated the Quaker Oats Co. had been granted to order to raise the water. He thought that amicable arrangement should be made, especially as the company were raising the water without authority.

Mr. Larmonth said that at the time the contract was made with the city he had told Mr. Conroy that he would have to take his chances, although the company would be willing to oblige him. He remarked that it would mean a great reduction in the power if the water were lowered, and didn't think this could be made without the consumers' consent, which would be practically impossible to obtain. He didn't wish to block the operations at the bridge, but the requirements of the consumers had to be met. Mr. Conroy knew well, he said, that nothing would be guaranteed him when he took the contract. In August or September he would be pleased to lower the water.

At this stage Mr. Conroy volunteered that Mr. Larmonth had said last fall that he would lower the water five feet this spring, and said he would do so on a recent occasions Mr. Larmonth qualified this by saying that he had stated he would make the reduction if such a thing were possible.

Technical explanations by Mr. Larmonth off how the work could be proceeded with without the lowering of the water were given, and City Engineer Hay said this would be a very difficult matter. An extensive discussion on the lowering of the water in the back lakes and on the merits of the case from both viewpoints followed.

Mr. Moore stated that the water was a foot higher than was legal, and Ald. Hicks thought that if the city couldn't get the company to consent to a reduction an action for damages should be filed. Ald. Phelan said Mr. Conroy had been hampered by the high water a great deal and expressed the opinion that Mr. Larmonth should be willing to make a concession in the city's interests.

As justification for the present high level of the water Mr. Larmonth called attention to the fact that a thousand horse power had been added since the contract for the bridge was taken by the Conroy Bros. A reduction of five feet would mean the lessening of the power supply by 600 or 700 h.p.

Several opinions were expressed, among them being one from Ald. Turner in a motion made by him that the council request the company to do what they could in the matter. Ald. Buller seconded the motion, and it was suggested that it be forwarded to Mr. Stuart, the general manager, at Chicago. Ald. Turner opined that the stability of the bridge couldn't be impaired by the operations five feet under water, but that the reduction of the water was simply a matter of convenience to the contractors. Mr. Larmonth concurred with this, but Mr. Conroy and Mr. Hay differed.

The proceedings culminated in the power committee, to which the matter was eventually referred, holding a special session, at which Mr. Larmonth agreed to have the water lowered for five feet for two weeks, although the lamps in a large number of places will be shod in somewhat depressed illumination as a result, and Mr. Larmonth anticipated that innumerable complaints from consumers would be the outcome.

The Dog Nuisance

To the Editor of the Review

Sir,—I was glad to see by your paper last night that the council have passed a by-law to prevent dogs running at large on the streets. There can be no doubt but that the vast majority of the ratepayers will be pleased with the council's action, and we hope the by-law will be well enforced. If any man wants to keep a dog, that's his business, but let him keep it on his own premises, and so as not to be a nuisance to the whole neighborhood.

Should Institute Pay License?

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—I notice by the papers last night that an entertainment is to be given on April 11th in the Collegiate Institute assembly hall, and that the price of reserved seats are 35 cents, and general admission 25 cents. Now, Mr. Editor, I was not aware that this institute was build to run shows in and to compete against the picture shows and the theatres which have to pay a license and taxes, and I think it is time this matter was looked into and stopped, else make them pay taxes and a license fee if they want to compete for the show business. Our police department should attend to the matter at once and see that all parties that put on concerts or shows of any kind should pay taxes and a license, and also have the necessary fire exits.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your valuable space,

I remain, yours,

FAIR PLAY.

Note.—With reference to the above our correspondent overlooks the fact that the entertainment as given by the pupils of the Institute for their own objects and that the fine hall was built and equipped for just such purposes. So long as the institute make use of the hall for matters within its educational scope and to some extent it social objects as well, no fault can be found. If the hall were rented for the purpose of making money on the side then some criticism might apply. Our correspondent's view is hastily taken and quite outside the facts. The evening is given by the pupils and the proceeds are for purposes of the social clubs of the institute.

What of the Future?

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—The people of Peterborough, notwithstanding the slur cast upon them by disappointed magnates (sic) are not "crazy." They have done well to set the wheels of progress going again. It will mean Greater Peterborough. A reasonable bargain has been concluded with a great and honorable company. Now let us begin to look round for more power. The dam on the lower Trent which we have our eye on is a matter for the future. It will be 5 or 6, perhaps 10 years, before the canal will be built, so as to develop that power. As it stands there is no power at the point referred to. It is the ONLY POWER outside Peterborough LEFT FOR US TO GET. Excepting Hydro-Electric there is only one power for us to get, and power cannot be laid down here at any time for less than $30. In view of these facts it is time to get a hustle on. Forward Peterborough!

Yours, etc.,

CITIZEN.

"Joan of Arc"

To the Editor of the Review;

Sir,—Permit me to draw public attention to the lecture on "Joan of Arc," by Dr. Llwyd, as advertised in your columns. Dr. Llwyd is a scholar, an orator and an enthusiast, and this is one of his favorite studies. The lecture should be a literary event, and I hope that a large audience may greet the distinguished lecturer.

"Tax Payer" Complains

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Last night all the arc lights in the city south of Hunter street were out from about 5.30 until morning, so some of the citizens report. Do the rate-payers pay the Power Company for these lights that are out all night? Do the policemen who are on their beats at night report these lights out to the Fire, Water and Light Committee, or to the Police Commissioners, or to the Fire Chief, or to the proper authorities? Surely it is not too much to ask that the aldermen see that the taxes are kept down to a reasonable rate and not pay corporations who have been given concessions for electric lights which they never supply. Of course, it cannot be said that the Power Company is to blame for charging up the cost of light against the city when they do not know that the lights are out, but some arrangement should be made to save the rate-payers paying for light which is never supplied them.

LECTURE BEFORE ART ASSOCIATION

On "Ideal in Contemporary Art" by Mr. Wyly Grier of Toronto Was Much Appreciated

The lecture given last night by Mr. E. Wyly Grier, under the auspices of the Women's Art Association, was apparently much appreciated by our people. Over two hundred gathered to hear this eminent artist on "Ideals in Contemporary Art." His lecture was breezy and interesting, and illustrated the new ideals to be found in pictures of the present day; also new departures in technique and composition. His examples of the French school of impressionists gave one a very realistic idea of this style of painting. Almost equally interesting was the German school of concessionists.

The Norwegian pictures were most pleasing, the American school daring introducing very startling ideas in their composition.

The lecturer held that while the Dutch as a nation were most artistic and as individuals had produced wonderful works of art, their painters of the present day failed to be influenced by new ideals. The examples of English landscapes and portraits were delightful. The general effect of Mr. Grier's lecture was to make one feel that if we chose to look beyond the walls of the dealers we could find much that was pleasing and worthy, though perhaps not be in vogue with these particular gentlemen.

A vote of thanks was given Mr. Grier, and also to the ladies of the association for both a pleasant and profitable evening.

COW BY-LAW WAS REGARDED AS A JOKE WHEN IT WAS PASSED

A gentleman who is familiar with municipal affairs in Peterborough, informed the Review to-day that when the by-law to prohibit cows from running at large was passed by the city council quite a number of years ago, it caused as much discussion as the new dog by-law is doing at the present time. A large number of citizens and several of the members of the council looked on the by-law as a joke, and thought it absurd for the council to pass such a measure. They declared it would never be enforced, but it is now apparent that their judgment was far from good.

"Probably the same thing will happen in regard to the dog by-law," the Review's informant remarked. "Twenty years from now the people may be wondering how the citizens ever tolerated dogs running at large in the city."

PROPOSITION FORWARDED TO THE C.G.E. GENERAL MANAGER

Mayor Morrow wrote Mr. Frederic Nicholls, general manager of the C. G.E., to-day, submitting the proposition of the city council and water commission, concerning the construction of a power house by the company. It would seem, from Mr. Nicholls' attitude, that it is practically assured that the directors will enter into an agreement with the city on the terms submitted.

At the fire at the fair grounds yesterday, during which the fence was destroyed, splendid volunteer assistance was given Chief Howard and his men. A large number of the children of the King Edward school rendered aid, and the chief is very grateful to them.

Mr. Rishor's Request

Mr. Charles Rishor intends to build a grocery warehouse on Dalhousie street, and stated to the city council last night that it would be in his interests to have the old bridge works building, which obstructs the site, removed. He also asked for sewer accommodation and sidewalk extension. The building will be removed and the other part of the request acted upon as legislation permits.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Blackburn's Eloquence.

The story is told of Senator Proctor of Vermont in reminiscences by Vice President Sherman that when invited to go out of the senate chamber just before the day's session began he replied: "Excuse me, I am paired with Blackburn on prayers." When the Rev. Dr. Butler retired from the chaplaincy of the senate Blackburn's speech surpassed all others for ardor and felicity of expression. "The counterpart of the scene that followed his closing words had never been witnessed in legislative assembly. All were in tears. It was even said that venerable senators who had never shed a tear since the ratification of the treaty of Ghent actually sobbed aloud and refused to be comforted. At length, amid silence that could be felt, an adjournment was effected, and the senators passed out to their homes. As he passed the chair Senator Vest in an undertone remarked to the vice president, 'Joe never saw him.'"

A Pet Walloper.

The parliamentary register for 1806 showed that there was then only one pot walloper in all England. One seeing the term for the first time might easily imagine that a pot walloper was a species of ichthyosaurus or some other reptile of a past age. It will be discovered upon inquiry, however, that the term "pot walloper" is literally one who boils a pot and was applied to voters in certain boroughs of England where before the passage of the reform bill of 1832 the qualifications for suffrage was to have boiled (walloped) his own pot in the parish for six months.—London Notes and Queries.

Wonderful Musical Memory.

Sir John Stainer had a wonderful musical memory. It was put to the test once at the Crystal palace when he had to play the organ in the "Messiah" and a folio copy, on which alone he could see the score, was not forthcoming. The conductor was in despair. Sir John cut the knot by a wonderful tour de force, playing the part faultlessly right through and entirely from memory, probably the only time the "Messiah" has been so rendered.—London Standard.

The Genial Doctor Puts Up a Job on His Fellow Townsman.

Dr. T. W. Vardon, M.P.P., of Galt, found himself one day lunching at the Walker House in Toronto. He had just taken his seat at the table and given his order when in walked a Galt man whom he knew very well, and took a seat at a table a few yards in front of where he sat. Presently a waitress walked over to the newcomer to take his order. The doctor caught her eye and beckoning her to his side told her that this man was a patient of his whom he was taking to the asylum, that he was perfectly harmless, but that he must not be given too much to eat.

"One of the symptoms of his insanity," said the doctor in a low tone, "is his belief that he must eat a little of everything on the bill of fare. Now, I do not want him to have very much to eat to-day. You ask him for his complete order at once, then bring him simply a few slices of bread and a bowl of water. He won't know the difference. He'll think you fetched him his order and he'll be just as well satisfied as if you brought him a full-course dinner."

"All right," answered the waitress. "I'll do as you say."

Sure enough, the man ordered everything from soup to nuts, then poured out a glass of water, drank it, and awaited his repast with evident relish. Presently it was brought in—a plate of bread and a bowl of water. His embarrassment can be more easily understood than described when the young lady, with tender sympathy in her every movement, deposited in front of him the simple elements of a frugal meal. He flushed crimson, stared in profound amazement at the waitress, who in turn looked appealingly over at the doctor, by this time sitting convulsed, with his napkin in his mouth, and thus directed the attention of her guest to him.

Explanations followed, a tip made it all right, and the two afterwards took their meal at the same table in felicitous comradeship.

He has sent many a man on a fruitless errand, and has "loaded up" more newspaper reporters than any other man in the town, yet throughout it all maintained his dignity and commanded respect as few other men could have done.

The Governor's Pardon

Story of a Man Who Showed Himself Brave and True.

By AGNES C. BROGAN.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The snow had been falling steadily for three days, and the long, low house at the edge of the woods was almost buried from sight.

A tall young man wearing a fur lined overcoat was busily engaged in removing heavy drifts from the wide verandas and in tunneling a pathway to the door. A great St. Bernard dog watched the performance with dignified approval.

It was a strange house to be placed alone in all this vast expanse of snowy landscape, built of logs, yet with white pillars supporting the veranda and over the doorway a rustic sign bearing the words, "The Bungalow." Behind the house, also built of logs, was a garage or small stable.

The man stopped his labor to pat the dog's head. "No walk for us today, old man," he said. "We must content ourselves with rereading the day before yesterday's paper."

The dog followed his master into the house, one long room of which reached from end to end. The man threw more logs into the fireplace and as the day grew darker lit a great lamp and glanced again at the discarded paper as though longing for the sound of a human voice. He read aloud, and the dog flapped his tail understandingly.

"Here is a society notice, Laddie. We can't get away from society, you see, though we live in snowy solitude: 'Miss Antoinette Marion Drew has left town for two or three weeks' rest. Upon her return invitations will be issued for her marriage to Governor James P. White.' And, after the strenuous work of landing Governor White, Laddie, no doubt Miss Drew, whoever she may be, deserves a rest."

The man yawned and cast the paper from him.

A loud knocking echoed through the house. He hesitated a moment, then, frowning, opened the door. A girl stood before him in the lamplight, a girl with white face peeping out from the scarlet hood of her cloak.

"May I come in?" she asked. "We have lost our way, and it is so very cold."

"Certainly," the man responded; "come in at once. You said 'we.'" He peered questioningly into the darkness.

"My horse," the girl explained. "Have you any place to put poor Billy until we are warmed and rested?"

"If you will step in," the man said, "I will attend to the horse presently."

The girl seated herself before the fire as he drew on his overcoat and lighted a lantern. "Fortunately there are a stable and some fodder," he said, "and if Billy does not object to a stale meal we may make him fairly comfortable."

The girl removed her cloak and settled back into the leather chair with a sigh of comfort as the cheering warmth brought the rose color flooding back to cheeks and lips.

She told him that she was staying with Aunt Martha and Uncle Ben down near the village. He remembered the old red farmhouse which she described and offered to drive her safely there when the storm had abated but the wind rattled the windows and shook the house to its very foundations, and later when he had forced the horse and sleigh to the roadway he staggered back blindly through the pelting ice to the house.

"You can't go," he told the girl, who stood ready in her scarlet cloak. "It would be impossible tonight. There is just one thing to be done—you must stay here with Laddie, who will guard you well, while the horse and I will try to find our way to the farmhouse to assure your people of your safety. If I should not return until morning you must not be alarmed. You must keep warm, and, above all things, do not let the fire die out." He turned to look at her as she still sat silent. "I am sorry that you must do this," he added, "sorry to leave you alone."

The girl came and stood looking up at him. "You must not think of me," she said. "Is it safe for you to go?"

"Quite safe," he answered smilingly.

Impulsively the girl put forth her hand, and the man clasped it. "Good night," she said. "We will be anxiously waiting for you, Laddie and I."

"I have been examining the doors and windows," the girl replied, "and am afraid it means that we are snowed in."

When the morning dawned he returned from a fruitless search. He slept till 9 o'clock and, noticing that the house was dark, asked the girl what it meant.

The man hurried about the house, looking in vain for a glimmer of light from the outside. Presently he came back to her. "I am afraid it is true," he said. "You wonderful girl, do you take all your misfortunes so happily?"

The girl laughed merrily. "You cannot tell this successfully, but I am very sure that Aunt Martha will not worry. It isn't her nature. She will know I have 'fetched up' somewhere."

Early in the afternoon they sat, one on either side of the fireplace, the dog's shaggy length stretched at the girl's feet, while the man read aloud. Presently, feeling the concentration of her eyes upon him, he looked up from the book.

"John Ryder," said the girl suddenly, "why did you come here?"

The man started visibly, and his face paled. "So," he said, "you know my name?"

She lifted a book from the reading table and, opening it, held it out to him in the lamplight. Upon the flyleaf was inscribed, "To John Ryder, From His Mother." The man's face hardened, then he said: "You must have heard the whole miserable story. It has been well advertised throughout the country."

The girl leaned forward. "Will you let me tell you all that I have heard?" she asked gently. He made an impatient gesture of dissent.

"It will be better for you," the girl urged, "to talk it over. Bearing so much alone has made you morbid."

"As you will," said the man and buried his face in his hands.

"I remember the day"—her voice was tender with sympathy—"that the newsboys were calling, 'Extra!' along the streets and I stopped to buy a paper with its glaring headlines, 'John Ryder Absconded!' I had heard about his extravagant entertainments, his generous gifts to charity. Now I read of widows and orphans left destitute, of homes destroyed because of his dishonesty. Then, while the world was still talking of his great crime, another extra was called—'John Ryder Dead!' As I read the sad story tears filled my eyes, for he was returning home, returning old and broken after one week to give himself up to the authorities, when they found him. But he never reached the prison walls. Heart disease, the papers said, though it seemed to me that, realising the enormity of his crime and sorrowing for it, he had died. Then I read of the son left to bear the shock and disgrace. They had blamed him, too—the papers—with sharp, stinging words, hinting that, associated closely with his father in business affairs, he must have known that the money which provided him with every luxury was not honestly earned. Oh, I was glad when he showed himself true and longed to go to this second John Ryder to tell him how splendid he was, for he gave up everything—the independent fortune which his mother had left her son, his automobiles, not even withholding the beautiful horse which had been his pet and pride. Then, penniless and quite alone, he disappeared.

"John Ryder," asked the girl again, "why did you come here?"

The man raised his face. "It was the coward instinct, I suppose," he said bitterly. "The fight was too strong for me, so I deserted. My mother loved this little place, and I could not let it go, so it was here we came to hide away from them all, Laddie and I."

"You a deserter," cried the girl, and her eyes were gleaming—"the bravest man that I have ever known! Shall I tell you why you came here to be alone for a time? It was that you might gather your forces together and then, going back into the very midst of the fight, show them, not what a John Ryder has been, but what a John Ryder can be."

The man's eyes seemed to have caught fire from hers. "I could do all that and more," he cried, "if you were waiting for me at the end." The girl's face was very white. "Forgive me," said the man huskily—"forgive me if you can. I have been quite carried away." There was a long silence before the girl spoke.

"You have also heard my name," she said. "I am Antoinette Drew, the promised wife of the governor."

"You!" cried the man incredulously as he looked at the girlish face in its frame of curling hair.

"He was my father's friend," she explained, "and held me upon his knee as a child. It was mother, I think, who made him realize that he wanted me for his wife. We have been taught, my sisters and I, that to achieve prominence and wealth leaves nothing to be desired, and we have done credit to our teaching. Out here in the great white world I have been thinking things over, wondering if I dare be true. I, too, have a battle before me, and I am going to play the game fair. I am going back to brave my father's anger and my mother's displeasure—to tell the governor all and ask pardon for the great wrong done him. I am glad," she added softly, "that my decision had been made before I knocked at your door, else I might question my own motive today."

The man leaned forward. "If he holds you to your promise," he asked tensely, "what then?"

The girl sighed. "I shall at least have been honest."

"And if he releases you?"

With a rush and a slide a great weight of snow came thundering down from the roof. "John Ryder," cried the girl unsteadily, "our furlough is over. Get out your shovel and set me free."

For days he haunted the little post-office. His last memory of her had been as she stood upon the platform of the train that was carrying her away. Just as the car turned the curve she drew herself erect and made a stiff little military salute. There had been a smile upon her lips and tears in her eyes. The picture came back to him this morning as the postmaster handed out a businesslike looking envelope and then a small square one. He hurried out into the sparkling world to be alone.

"It has come, Laddie," he said to the dog; "it has come at last." For a moment he feared to break the seal, then stood still as the full significance of her message came to him. "The governor has granted our pardon," he read.

The man went running up the shining roadway, the great dog leaping and barking joyously at his side. When they had gone some distance he remembered the other envelope and tore it open. It was an offer of a position of great trust and was signed by the governor.

Talk Killed a Bear.

"I suppose," said the barber to the man who was wearing a bear's claw on his watch chain—"I suppose you killed that bear yourself?"

"Yes, I did," was the reply.

"Was it a grizzly bear?"

"It was."

"A big one?"

"About the size of a two-year-old steer."

"Gee whiz! How many bullets did it take to kill him?"

"Not any at all."

"Brain him with an axe?"

"No; I talked him to death."

It took the customer fifteen minutes to get the rest of his shave, and during that time the barber didn't speak another word.

Just entered upon his seventieth year, Mr. Justice Bigham is one of the many eminent lawyers who have first started on other careers. Before devoting himself to law he spent five years on the Liverpool Exchange. Educated in Paris and Berlin, he had already acquired a knowledge of languages that was to prove of excellent service to him in the courts. But it was not destined to be all plain sailing for him at the first. "What on earth has induced you to come to the Bar?" was the discouraging question asked by Lord Russell of Killowen when the future Justice Bigham entered the chambers of the famous advocate as a pupil. It was a question that took the pupils some years to answer! During his first twelve months at the Bar the young lawyer earned only seven guineas, though later on, when he had succeeded Lord Russell of Killowen as leader of the Northern Circuit, his income was one of the largest ever earned at the Bar. Until a few years ago there was a certain judge distinguished among other things for the unpunctuality with which he began the judicial day. On one occasion Mr. Bigham, then one of the busiest advocates in the Common Law Courts, waited twenty-five minutes for his arrival. Having a second case to attend to in another court he went out to see how it was faring, and while he was gone the unpunctual judge made his appearance on the bench. "I have waited five minutes for you, Mr. Bigham," exclaimed his lordship impatiently when the busy counsel returned. "My lord," was the bold retort, "I waited five times as long."

ECZEMA FOR NINE YEARS

Zam-Buk Works Another Great Cure

Another wonderful cure of the dread scourge, eczema, by the great herbal balm Zam-Buk is reported from Montreal by Mr. Thos. Amesse of 900 St. Timothee street. He says:

"For about nine years my son, Emile, was a great sufferer from eczema. The disease broke out on his face and arms, which were covered with sores. These would scale over for a time, but would then break open again and cause him terrible agony. At other times they would itch and burn, and it was impossible for him to refrain from scratching. Yet scratching or rubbing only caused him more pain afterwards.

"We tried salves and soaps and preparations of all kinds, but it seemed that we could get nothing to benefit him. This state of affairs went on during nine long years, and you can well imagine the agony he suffered!

"Zam-Buk was recommended to us, but we feared it would prove like all other remedies had proved—useless! We got a supply, however, and it was not long before we found out its virtues. It eased the pain and removed the irritation. Then it began to heal the sores, until bit by bit the patch got less and less. The skin which was cracked and sore became soft and smooth, and in the end every trace of the disease was banished. The skin to-day is clear and smooth and there is no trace of the sores and ulcers and cracks, which for nine years caused him such agony."

Not only for eczema, but for ulcers, blood poisoning, bad leg, varicose ulcers, itch, salt rheum, cold cracks, scalp sores, children's rashes and piles, Zam-Buk is a sure cure. Used as an embrocation it cures rheumatism and sciatica. All druggists and stores at 50c. box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. You are warned against substitutes and harmful imitations.

The STORY of the COMPANY LOOT

By Luke Thrice

One of the startling experiences of the "Master Rogue," in which he amply proved his right to his title and the head of his profession.

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

OTA, the grave, silent Japanese butler, turned out all but one of the bulbs in the electrolier, leaving the figure of the stout man who stood upon the hearth rug in a vague, shaded light.

The man's attitude showed expectancy, and he gave a gesture of satisfaction as the sudden message of the doorbell broke from below stairs.

"Take a look in the mirrors," he said sharply. Ota glided like a frictionless machine through the front parlor, where he opened a panel in the wall next the entry.

"Mr. Laxton," he announced softly.

"Let him in," said the other.

Laxton followed the lead of the butler like a visitor who knows his way and is assured of his welcome. He had taken a step inside the rear parlor before he saw the man standing on the hearth rug. It was not the one he was accustomed to find in that apartment, but there was something very familiar about this unexpected occupant, about the baggy dress suit, the rumpled shirt bosom and the cigar clamped in the corner of the mouth. He peered into the shadows for a better look at the face and started when the stout man spoke.

"Step in, Laxton. Make yourself at home, to stretch a point."

"Hello!" said Laxton mechanically. Then, "Why, it's Weldstone. What the devil are you doing here?"

"Nabbed," answered the other in a harsh, unpleasant voice. "Jess dropped in."

Laxton searched the place with sidelong glance. "I didn't know that you knew—that you were acquainted in this house," he finished awkwardly, checking the name that rose too nimbly to his tongue.

"What, Burch?" said the stout man, divining Laxton's caution. "Old side kick. I always look him up every so often."

Laxton hung between surprise and uneasiness. There was no sign of the master's presence and Ota had disappeared. "Where is Burch?" he asked.

"Inside," said the stout man, nodding toward the door of the extension at the rear. Laxton followed the move and lowered his tone.

"Say, Weldstone, you needn't tell him about that investment company plan, here!" he said quickly.

"Much obliged, Laxton," said the cool voice of the master himself, and the stout man straightened and clasped his hands. Ota entered instantly. "Help me out of these things," said Burch. Ota followed him through the rear door and the two left Laxton in a state of pitiable bewilderment.

He had not made much progress toward recovery when the master reappeared, garbed in his usual immaculate style and adjusting the loose folds of his familiar red dressing gown about his slender, powerful person. Laxton sank limply into a chair at the other side of the fireplace, while Ota set out the cigars and the kümmel.

"Laxton," said Burch gravely, after some minutes of silence, "you present a painful problem to me. I am compelled to guard you with all the care of a personal attendant. You have a natural aptitude for getting into a mess from which I must drag you, usually much against your will. Your remarkable gifts as a listener I appreciate. But you cost me a great deal of trouble."

"What was wrong this time?" asked Laxton doggedly.

"Weldstone—and you have your answer," said Burch.

"What of him?"

The Crash in Stocks.

"Why, fair youth, he and his blessed investment company, to which you were about to tie your fortunes, would have wrecked you, that's all. You are not from a universal genius, Laxton. Stick to lines where your expert knowledge of bookkeeping, filing and office systems or the intricacies of commercial paper and handwriting come in. Investment companies, promotion schemes, mail order and financial bureaus open up a highly specialized department of the profession. Approaching them you are like a chiropodist who essays a major surgical operation."

"But I had nothing to lose," objected Laxton.

"Nothing but a few years out of your life," said the master. "If that is nothing. There is no cleverer operator on the shady fringe of finance in the world than Weldstone. And I can tell you the names of at least six men who are so accommodating as to be serving prison terms for him. You were on the books for a like service."

Laxton considered the matter gloomily. "I suppose I would be safer if I consulted you. But I have always avoided that."

"And you were exactly right. You know that. I will share none of your cases until they are past, and then only as matter for discussion."

"How did you know I was going in with Weldstone?" asked Laxton, after another pause.

"At your last visit you descanted very knowingly upon certain well established traits of the estimable public in regard to alluring investment offers," said Burch, with a quiet smile. "For my second point I have seen traces of Weldstone's padded feet upon the financial roads of late. Then you were unemployed, ambitious. You would just about suit him in an extremely useful capacity." Acting on all this, I obtained the verification of my suspicions in the most expeditious manner. By the way, I must commend your care in withholding my name so deftly."

Laxton threw up both hands in a little gesture of surrender. "All right, I give in," he said. "No more high finance for me. But Weldstone—there's a plausible dog, if you like."

Burch nodded slowly. "It might be of value and interest if I should adopt this little picture with an instance in which I clashed with the redoubtable Weldstone," he said. "I do not regard him as among the greatest of my opponents, but I can never deny that the brush I had with him was stimulating. The man is cunning, not wholly lacking in qualities and most admirably equipped with unscrupulous brutality.

"I was passing an idle half hour in the corner of a downtown café one afternoon when I heard a sudden sharp cry and a rush of feet from back of me. I turned to see a tall, poorly dressed man of middle age shaking another by the shoulders. His face was twisted with rage and he was exclaiming: 'Thief! Scoundrel! Bloodsucker!' and like pleasantries. The other man was stout and well built and much stronger than his adversary, whom he threw off almost immediately, darting for the door before any one could stop him. As he passed me I recognized Weldstone.

"Several besides myself had started up with the intention of stopping a fight, but the rapid escape of the one and the unprepossessing appearance of the other gave little excuse for intervention or inquiry. The tall man stood staring after Weldstone with a furious expression of baffled hate upon his thin, worn face. I wondered for a moment that he did not pursue his prey, but I saw presently that he was trembling from weakness and that he clung to a chair for support.

"One of the waiters who had witnessed the incident closed it at this juncture by catching the tall man roughly under the arms and hustling him out to the street. Knowing Weldstone and his record, I was interested to learn the cause of this stranger's attack upon him, and I followed.

The Tall Man.

"I found the tall man leaning against the wall of the building, looking about him in a wild and frightened way. He was in bad shape. His tattered garments gave him little protection against a raw November wind. His cheeks were sunken and he gave every evidence of prolonged starvation. He was in no condition to be questioned, and without a word I took him by the sleeve and led him into a cheap restaurant a few doors away. He offered no resistance and his eyes lighted wolfishly at the sight of food.

"After I had fed him judiciously, restraining his eagerness with some difficulty, he began to look more like a human being and less like an animal or a lunatic. I had some fears that he was beyond intelligent discourse, but he soon set them at rest.

"'You must pardon me if I seem ungrateful,' he said. 'But this is the first meal I have had in three days.'

"He spoke like a man of refinement and education. I made some conventional reply and added: "I saw your little tussle with Weldstone in the café.'

"He stared at me intently. 'Are you a friend of Weldstone?' he asked suddenly, with a flash of suspicion.

"'Far from being his friend, I have cause to dislike him,' I answered.

"For a moment I thought he should have strangled with the passion of anger that shook him. 'Do you know where I can find him?' he gasped. 'For God's sake, tell me, just to get my hands on him again now that I have strength; just one more chance, just with my naked hands.'

"I quieted him and asked him to tell me his story.

"'My story? It's old enough and common enough in the track of that man,' he said, bitterly. 'My name is Hale. I was a music teacher in Des Moines two years ago, with a home and family. I had a little savings account and was persuaded that I could make it more productive if I could find the opening. One day I received by mail a most alluring circular. It advertised an investment company in Chicago. I suppose you are familiar enough with the swindle. The company, through valuable sources of inside information, was able to make enormous profits on the stock market. It solicited remittances, guaranteeing a return of one per cent a week.

"'I knew nothing about such matters except in a very general way, and the proposition seemed reasonable. Several of my neighbors went into the thing and began to receive their returns regularly each Monday. Convinced that this was my opportunity, I drew out my $2,000, all I had in the world, and sent it on.

"'For a month after that the interest was paid promptly. With each payment came a market letter, which conveyed little information to me, but spoke largely and confidently of the success of the company and the prospect for a still larger return to clients. I congratulated myself upon my wise move.

Penniless and Half Mad.

"'Then came a Monday which brought no interest, no word of any kind. I waited a few days, then wrote demanding an explanation. I wrote repeatedly, but my first answer was from the Post Office authorities. And then I learned of the miserable mistake I had made, for the investment company had vanished into air overnight, leaving an empty office and no trace of the criminals.'

"He was forced to stop a moment before he could control his emotion. 'That might not have been so bad,' he went on. 'The loss of money itself could not have crushed me. But I fell ill through worry, I lost my pupils, then my home by failure to meet a payment. Finally my wife died in misery, and after a long siege in the hospital I found myself on the street, penniless and half mad. All this is ordinary, but I did not sink under it, as others have done.

"'I found such wretched employment as I could pick up and for six months I saved every cent, scraping and starving to feel my little fund. Then I went to Chicago and began my search, the search after the men who had brought this ruin upon me. I did not approach the authorities. I thrust myself in among those whose business was the robbing of the gullible as I had been robbed. My hate lent me some cleverness in my part. I gained standing among my associates. Finally a fortunate accident threw in my way the information I sought, and I first heard the name of the arch fiend, Weldstone.

"'Since then I have followed him. He knows me; has reason to know me. Three times I have just missed him. And look here.'

"With unsteady hands he drew from a pocket a printed circular. 'He is at his old trade again. See. This is the advertisement of the Ironclad Investment and Securities Company, Yupon Building, William street. That is Weldstone. Missouri has been flooded with these and he sits here safe, ready to reap another harvest at the expense of suffering like mine. Oh, he is clever, clever! His name does not appear. He seldom goes near the office. His connection with the firm cannot be proved. But I know. When the time comes he and his jackal, Lally, will make a clean sweep and scurry elsewhere to begin again.

"'There you have my story. And now, if you have a touch of human feeling, tell me where I can find Weldstone. I have waited day by day near the Yupon Building. But he is sly. He does not come.' The man was taken with a fit of shivering as he made an end, and his wild, burning eyes spoke more eloquently than his words of his latent and essential insanity. He seemed, moreover, to be in great pain and he pressed feebly against his chest at frequent intervals.

"'Have you given your information to the Post Office people?' I asked.

"'No,' he said, fiercely. 'This is my affair, mine, between Weldstone and me. And to think that but now I held him and he escaped me.' He sobbed and clasped his hands. And then, suddenly, as I sat watching him I saw a swift veil of gray pass over his face. He rose partly from his seat, cried out incoherently and sank back unconscious. I left him in charge of the restaurant people, and hurried out in search of a physician. I did not return, for I could not run the risk, but a few lines in the papers next morning told of the death of an unidentified man who had been taken from the restaurant to Bellevue. Meanwhile I had retained the circular of the Ironclad Investment and Securities Company.

"I found a vacant office on the tenth floor of the Yupon Building off the corridor that led to the gilded door of that company and opened negotiations for it in the capacity of a third but honest portrait painter. I moved in enough stage property to support the claim and settled to watch.

The One Satisfaction.

"I am no moralist, Laxton, but there is such a thing as an ethical standard in the profession, as you have heard me say before. One derives a certain satisfaction from plying one's trade against such persons as Weldstone. Him I had always despised, with his flabby body, his flashy polish, his sparse, oily hair and his manner of one who darts while cringing. Lally I knew, too—a little red whiskered jackal of a man, whose character and attainments were best shown by his attitude toward his owner. Weldstone continuously gives the impression that he knows he has no right to be present, but he'd like to throttle you just the same; Lally seems forever warning people not to step on him because he is the property of the mastiff Weldstone.

"Both of them were keeping away from the company's offices when I took a hand. Weldstone was quite clear of it, as he always is. Lally's part would have been and subsequently was a matter of mystery in a court inquiry. The man who ran the office was a former clerk, Coe. He was marked for sacrifice and is still doing his spell up the river for his connection with the firm. It was the old case of the grubbing, underpaid servant of Wall street who gets the wholesale dishonesty hunger, makes a grab and is laid away with dyspepsia, while some one else scoops the lion's share of the feast.

The Figure of the Stout Man Standing Upon the Hearth Rug in a Vague Shaded Light

"The game was humming three weeks later and the company had to rent two more rooms and recruit a staff to handle the business. I began to live close to the studio in expectation of the crash, for there were at least two good Post Office inspectors in the district. Then came a night when Lally and Weldstone arrived in a hurry after the employes and Coe had gone. Missouri's harvest was in.

"It was late and I was ready to break in on them when Weldstone came out of the office alone and went down the elevator. He was carrying nothing, so I let him pass. When he had gained quietly forced one of the side doors to the company's quarters and stole through to the main room, which was lighted. Lally sat at the table sorting and smoothing out the contents of two waste paper baskets crammed to the top with small bills, evidently the takings for the day.

"I crept up behind him, threw a scarf over his head, gagged and bound him and dragged him into the next room. I had just time to toss the bundle after him when Weldstone's returning step sounded along the corridor. I opened the door to him as he reached it. 'Hello,' I said. 'Are you a detective? I should say there was need of you here.'

"'Who the hell are you?' he growled.

"'Why, I'm Wilson, the artist down the hall,' I said, easily. 'I was working late. I heard some one run past my door a moment ago and came out just in time to see a red haired man with a bundle under his arm tearing for the stairs. The door to the offices here was open, so I came to investigate. I think the place has been robbed.'

"I had gauged the relations between Weldstone and his jackal correctly from the quarrel I had overheard. There was nothing more likely than that Lally should have betrayed him and made off with what he could get his hands on, for few shared heavily the takings who worked with Weldstone, and this I knew.

The Safe in the Corner.

"His gaze flew to the safe in the corner. 'Did he go up or down?' he asked.

"'Down.' He smiled. I did not quite understand that smile. Then he sized me up, evidently to his satisfaction, for he proceeded to develop the suggestion I had left to him.

"'You're right,' he said, lowering his weapon; 'there's been some damn mischief here. I'm not a detective, but a member of the company. I'll just see how the safe is.' He crossed the room and crouched by the safe, twirling the knob.

"He watched me slyly out of the tail of his eye and I could read his purpose like print. Weldstone was not the one to leave a witness behind him who could tell a story of having seen a certain stout gentleman clear out the Ironclad Investment Company's safe on the eve of the crash, but neither was he one to put that witness away in any but a skilful and silent manner. I could almost follow him as he considered the problem.

"When the door of the safe swung open he took out package after package of fresh bills of large denomination, bought with the contributions of his dupes and stored here against getaway day. He was reaching far inside for the last when I was on him in two quick strides. The reach had taken him a trifle off his balance and he could not turn soon enough. I caught his wrist twisted it until he cried out and wrenched the weapon from him. Then I threw it inside the safe, closed the door and pushed the tumblers over.

"He spun away from me, glaring and snarling, set for a spring. I was ready for him, and the coward knew it. He held off. 'What's all this?' he breathed. 'Who the hell are you, anyway?'

"I faced him calmly. 'I'm a friend of Hale's,' I said.

"He cowered and went dead white at the name. It had haunted him for many a day, for many a restless night. There was some comfort. He had blanched before now at the mention of this most persistent of his victims. But even in his fear he was casting about to play cunning.

"'What're you goin' to do?' he asked hoarsely.

"'I'm going to settle scores for him, so far as I can,' I said.

"'Are you goin' down?' There was hope in his eye.

"'Why not?' I answered. 'And you can count on this—you go with me.' His face fell again.

"'You don't dare go down,' he said, studying me. 'Listen. Burk and Money, the Post Office inspectors, are layin' in the lobby. They near got me a minute ago.'

"He had a cleverness of his own. He suspected that I had no more wish to face the inspectors than he had. And I had no reason to doubt that he was telling the truth, that I did not yet understand his scare at the news of Lally's defection and this anxiety about going up or down stairs.

"'What of it?' I asked sharply.

"'I got a rope ladder hidden on the roof,' he said. 'It's long enough to reach to the next buildin', six stories.' He thought still to overreach me, but I was ready to see the thing through.

I Was Ready for Him, and the Coward Knew It

"I marched him in front of me to the roof. At the studio I stepped and dumped the armful of bills into a satchel, picking up some other necessary supplies. It was a dark, gusty night of late fall, low flying clouds obscuring the sky. Weldstone found his ladder in the shaft house and flung it over the side, making fast with the grappling irons. 'Shall I go first?' he asked.

The Revolver.

"At my gesture he grunted himself over the edge and descended rapidly for such a heavy man. I stood watching him when suddenly something hard and unpleasantly insistent was poked into my ribs.

"'If y' so much as move I'll pump y' full,' said a whiny voice in my ear. Lally! I'd forgotten that jackal and he had squirmed loose, probably in time to hear my talk with Weldstone, certainly in time to follow us. I preferred taking liberties with the other man to risking them with this one. There was something desperate and sinister in his trembling courage, in the way the wind gurgled in his throat when he breathed.

"He held his revolver against me with one hand and reached for the satchel with the other. 'Give it to me, give it!' he whispered.

"It was a long gamble, but I held it in both hands and played for a moment's delay. 'Hold on, you can't do me out of my share now,' I said. 'I made a deal with your pal. He's down below there on the ladder. You're in on it too, of course.'

"I had backed against the parapet and as I finished that most pressing of all arguments bored into me again. 'Give it up,' he whined. 'Give it up or I'll send y' t' hell, quick, quick!' I held out the satchel within the last fraction of a second he would have allowed me and he grabbed it as he threw one leg over the parapet. Looking close I could see that he had slipped one wrist through the handle of the satchel. He kept me lined until he had descended several rungs, when he was forced to put away his revolver and give all his attention to the ladder.

"Hanging over the edge I could see him crawling down slowly, like some monstrous spider on his thread. The roof of the building below, six floors down, was covered with white pebbles and his form was faintly distinguishable against this background. He made heavy weather of it, clinging for minutes at a time, doubtless in dizzy terror, for the man had no more spirit than a bug. Meanwhile I scanned the lower surface eagerly for some sign of Weldstone. It was upon him that I counted now, but I could not find him.

"Down and down went Lally, checking whenever the wind caught him and whirled him against the flank of the office building and wailing a few words at intervals. He had nearly reached the bottom when I saw a black, squat figure swarm up to the top of a low chimney just beyond the spot where Lally would alight, and poise there. Then the climber reached the roof and in that instant Weldstone, for it was he, ambushed upon the chimney, leaped with upraised arm. There came the sound of a struggle, and I hurried away, leaving Lally the task of explaining to his infuriated employer that he was Lally, and not me."

"But the satchel, with the money?" broke in Laxton. "Did you let him get clear away with that?"

"He hadn't time to get a hand on the satchel," returned Burch with a smile. "In the second's delay, when I held Lally off I managed to fasten the end of a length of twine into one of the rings of the handle. I had hoped he might hold it in his mouth while descending. When Weldstone grabbed, his fist caught on Lally's wrist for a moment longer, but it served to end the struggle. I don't think Weldstone even saw the precious satchel dance away skyward. I passed the inspectors as they came up in the elevator.

"I was sorry Hale was not on hand to share in the exploit and the proceeds. But I think I [illegible] of the account for him."

SINGLE TAX WAS UNDER DISCUSSION

A very interesting meeting was held on March 31st at the Zion Farmers' Club when Mr. H. B. Cowan, of the Farm and Dairy, was present and gave an address on that important subject "Single Tax." He said what the people of Canada needed was to look more deeply into the great questions of the day and see where they could better the conditions of the age. Mr. Cowan also stated that the people were unconsciously letting vast fortunes slip from them into the hands of large combines and trusts which rightly belonged to people not interested in them at all. He also advocated the taxation of land values.

After a short discussion upon the subject a vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Cowan for the kindness he has shown to the club in many ways.

But Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Mrs. Thompson's Dropsy

It Started With Backache and Grew Worse till the Doctor Said She Must Die.

Holt, Ont., April 8.—(Special.)—All the countryside here is ringing with the wonderful cure of Mrs. Samuel Thompson, who lay at the point of death for weeks, swollen with Dropsy so that the doctor five different times decided to tap her but desisted because, as her husband said, "it might be better to let her die in peace." After the doctor had given her up Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her.

Mrs. Thompson's terrible trouble started with pain in the back. She grew worse and the doctor treated her for jaundice for eight weeks. Then her feet and legs began to swell, and it was realized that Dropsy was the trouble. For seven months she suffered. The doctor said there was no hope; she must die.

"As a last resort Dodd's Kidney Pills were tried. The improvement was slow, but gradually her strength came back. To-day Mrs. Thompson is a well woman. She says, and the country-side knows, she owes her life to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

If the disease is of the Kidneys, or from the Kidneys, Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it.

Are You Weak, Bloodless, Anaemic?

You Can Be Cured of Poverty of the Blood Just Like Miss Everett Was.

Since the early ages, in all countries, among all classes of people, anaemia has been one of the most pernicious conditions that affect mankind.

Writing from her home in Paisley, Mrs. Everett says:—"My daughter had just passed her sixteenth year, when she began to rapidly lose color and strength. Serious complications set in that made her family and friends most anxious. We were not only worried on account of her ill-health, but because she was likely to lose her years' work at the High school, where she was preparing for the profession of teaching. The doctor said it was 'Anaemia' and that the best remedy was Ferrozone—and made my daughter take two Ferrozone Tablets with every meal. The first box did little more than increase her appetite. But with the second box it was really delightful to watch the signs of returning health. Annie's face became sort of a yellowish at first—that deadly whiteness disappeared. But it wasn't long before a ruddy glow was perceptible in her cheeks, and real good color returned. All Annie's troubles were cured—she grew strong—vigorous—heavy in weight—feels and looks the picture of health."

Queer Old Australian Tradition About the Flood.

The aboriginal blacks of Australia have a queer tradition about the flood. They say that at one time there was no water on the earth at all except in the body of an immense frog, where men and women could not get at it. There was a great council on the subject, and it was found out that if the frog could be made to laugh the waters would run out of his mouth and be drought be ended.

So several animals were made to lance and caper before the frog to induce him to laugh, but he did not even smile; and so the waters remained in his body. Then some one happened to think of the queer contortions into which the eel could twist itself, and it was straightway brought before the frog, and when the frog saw the wriggling he laughed so loud that the whole earth trembled, and the waters poured out of his mouth in a great flood, in which many people were drowned.

The black people were saved from drowning by the pelican. This thoughtful bird made a big canoe and went with it among all the islands that appeared here and there above the surface of the water and gathered in the black people and saved them.

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

THE ANTI-RACING MEASURE IS DEAD FOR THIS YEAR AT LEAST

Premier Favors it, Hon. Mr. Aylesworth Opposes it, its Originator is Willing to Let it Drop, But Hon. Mr. Fielding Saves it for Possible Resurrection Another Day.

Ottawa, April 8. H. H. Miller's anti-race track gambling bill is dead so far as this session of Parliament is concerned, unless he accepts the amendments of J. B. McColl of West Northumberland, and this is hardly likely.

When the bill was taken up yesterday evening, clause by clause, it was evident that a majority of the House was against the measure. The first two clauses were struck out, and then Mr. Miller moved that the committee rise and report progress. The latter part of his motion was at the suggestion of Mr. Fielding. Both Sir Wilfrid Laurier and R. L. Borden voted for the bill.

J. R. Stratton (Peterboro), one of the investigating committee, said public opinion favored the bill. "I honestly believe that the system of horse racing in Ontario can be changed so that racing will continue and that root of all evil, the bookmaker, will be abolished. I am opposed to any compromise," he said.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth said he preferred Mr. McColl's amendment. He thought it an extraordinary way of getting after the desired object by making an individual liable to criminal prosecution. The average man did not believe in this method, and most people did not think that betting in itself was wrong. Parliament had recently passed a law making a boy, almost a man, who smoked a cigarette guilty of a crime. A Sunday law had been passed to prevent a man doing certain things on the Sabbath. This bill would make it a crime for a man to make a bet with a friend of either sex. Soon they might have a law to make a game of cards a crime, or dancing, or other amusements.

He deprecated this manner of legislation, and was sorry that it should be necessary. He considered that many of these matters would have been better left to the Legislatures, the same as license affairs.

R. L. Borden said there was no doubt but the promoters of the bill had the interests of the country at heart. They were engaged in fighting what was admitted to be a great evil, and required a remedy. Some provisions of the bill were extreme, but some provision in the amendment were not fully satisfactory. The promoters of the bill should have imposed upon the Government the responsibility of the measure, yet they had the extraordinary spectacle of the Minister of Justice declaring the bill, not only extreme, but outrageous. The Government was absolutely abrogating its function. He knew of no parallel to this situation in any Parliament in any English-speaking country.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said Mr. Borden would find the doctrine hard to maintain in this Parliament. A private member had the privilege of introducing legislation. If the bill was of such a character that it was the duty of the Government to take a position upon it, it was also the duty of the Opposition to take a position upon it. This was a question which interested every member of the community. The Premier stated the Government had refused to take up the bill, but members thought they should have an opportunity of expressing their views upon it, when the Government had given them this opportunity it had done all its duty.

Hon. John Haggart said all legislation, private or otherwise, the Government was responsible for. That doctrine had been laid down over and over again by Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself, when a public bill referred to a crime, and the Minister of Justice called it absurd, and laughed at it, the situation was remarkable.

At the evening sitting Mr. Roy (Montmagny) moved that the chairman vacate—a device to further delay the bill. The nays won out, and the debate proceeded.

Mr. McColl moved that section 1 of the bill be struck out, and Mr. Aylesworth spoke briefly, answering criticisms made of his speech in the afternoon. He reiterated that section 1 would get after the individual bettor.

Mr. McColl's motion carried by one vote—yeas 78, nays 77.

Section 2 was then taken up, and Mr. Miller moved an amendment which was intended to make clear the definition of the word "place," as applied to gambling. But Mr. McColl moved that the clause be struck out and Mr. Miller's amendment to safeguard the rights of private individuals to make bets was lost—yeas 74, nays 87; while Mr. McColl's motion carried—yeas 85, nays 77. Mr. McColl moved his own amendment, the same as the British law, and Mr. Miller said that he and Mr. Lancaster were doing it in the interest and for the gamblers and racing interests. Mr. Lancaster condemned Mr. Miller in a warm speech.

Mr. Turriff defended Mr. Miller, who then moved that the committee rise. This would mean the killing of the bill. Mr. Fielding suggested that the committee report progress, which would leave him a chance to introduce changes in the bill and not kill it altogether, and Mr. Miller accepted the suggestion. After some confusion, the motion to kill the bill was lost, one incident being the Deputy Speaker ruling a motion by the Prime Minister out of order.

Mr. Borden asked the Prime Minister if there would be more time devoted to the bill this session.

"If we wish to reach prorogation soon," the Prime Minister said, "the House will have to be satisfied with the two days spent on it at this late time of the session."

And so the debate ended.

MISS RUTH WHEELER AND HER ALLEGED SLAYER

MISS RUTH WHEELER AS A YOUNG GIRL.

KATCHEN MÜLLER.

ALDLEY WOLTERS

New York, April 5.—That Ruth Amos Wheeler, the sixteen-year-old stenographer who went seeking employment last week and whose charred body was found on a fire escape at No. 224 East Seventy-fifth street; was burned to death by the slayer was the statement made by Dr. O'Hanlon, Coroner's physician. This assertion came after an autopsy had been made. Dr. O'Hanlon found the lungs congested and a deep mark on the right side of the neck, evidently made by a rope when the murderer sought to strangle his victims Dr. O'Hanlon said:—

"Over the right nostril and on part of the face I found the remnant of a square of linen. I believe the girl was smothered and, while still alive, but unconscious, was put into the fireplace and the body incinerated."

Professor John H. Larkin, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, will make a microscopic examination of the body. His report, it is expected, will shed additional light upon the crime.

Katchen Mullen, or Kate Miller, as she was better known, who was regarded as the wife of Walter Wolters, who is now in the Tombs, charged with the murder of the Wheeler girl, was arrested by Policeman Robert Hoeter, of the Central Office, and is held as a valuable witness. She denies all knowledge of the murder and the police declare they are inclined to believe her story.

PANIC FOLLOWED EXPLOSION ON BRITISH STEAMER NEAR DOVER

One Child is Killed, and Several Women and Children Are Injured in Disaster—Steamer Catches Fire and Men Fight for Possession of Boats, But Are Beaten Back by the Crew.

Dover, Eng., April 8.—A terrific explosion occurred early yesterday morning on the British steamer Cairnona, of Dungenness, which wrecked the women's quarters, killing one child and injuring a number of women and children.

The steamer caught fire and a panic ensued, in which men fought for the possession of the boats and had to be beaten back by the crew to allow the women to be taken off first.

A large number of the passengers were landed here last night, many of them in an exhausted condition. In all 20 persons were seriously, and not less than 50 slightly, injured by the explosion and in the panic that followed it.

The Cairnrona sailed Wednesday from London for Portland, Maine. She carried 900 passengers, for the most part emigrants, and a general cargo.

By good luck the steamers Upland and Kanawha were close at hand when the Cairnrona caught fire and stood by and took off several hundred passengers and landed them here.

Several of the first-class passengers and American cattlemen gave thrilling details of the accident. A number of women, with children in their arms, were sitting on a hatch, when suddenly a violent explosion hurled them to all parts of the deck. Some of them were shockingly injured, and one child was killed. The hatch was blown to fragments.

A terrible panic ensued, the emigrants, mostly Russians, running up and down, screaming and wringing their hands. Their terror was increased by the volume of smoke which poured from the burning hold. The captain and officers made ineffectual efforts to calm them, and then signals of distress were sent up. In the meantime another explosion occurred in the engine room, injuring several of the engineers.

The Kanakha and Upland steamed up quickly and the captain decided to transfer all the passengers. This was accomplished speedily, but was accompanied by scandalous scenes. Scores of men tried to rush the boats, and many of them fought with the women, tearing and dragging them under foot.

The crew battled valiantly against the panic-stricken emigrants, using fists and feet and any weapon they could find. Not a few of the frantic men were felled to the deck before the hysterical, fainting women and children could be gotten to the boats.

In the stampede four persons fell or were pushed into the sea and were rescued with difficulty.

The Kanawha and Upland reached Dover with the rescued passengers late in the afternoon, and the scenes at the landing were piteous. Exhausted by cold and exposure, many of them half famished and other suffering from injuries, they were brought ashore and supplied with food, clothing and medical attention.

Admiral Prince Louis of Battenburg and the princess, with the British naval officers, lent their assistance. The naval surgeons attended the wounded, many of whom were removed in ambulances to hospitals.

The Prince and Princess of Battenburg had been giving a dinner party, but they broke it up and came ashore with their guests to attend to the wants of the refugees.

The Cairnrona's captain is endeavoring to persuade those of his passengers remaining here to re-embark on his steamer. Several hundred of them took train for London last night.

JURY FINDS THAT WALTER ROSS MURDERED PERCY PARKINSON

Plea of Self-Defence is Refused by Fact That Wound Was Behind Ear and Pockets Were Turned Inside Out Saul Gouin is Placed on Trial for Murder of Mary E. Smith.

North Bay, April 8.—Walter Ross was yesterday found guilty of the murder of Percy Parkinson, his companion on a prospecting trip, at Ramore, 200 miles north of this place, last December.

Ross pleaded that he had shot Parkinson in self-defence when he had been threatened by Parkinson with an axe, but medical evidence given yesterday was to the effect that the bullet had entered Parkinson's head behind the right ear. Trousers of the deceased, with pockets turned out, were exhibited.

Mr. McGarry, for the defence, said he had no witnesses, and he did not even put the prisoner in the box. He held that the crown must prove murder beyond doubt. There had been no evidence of malice and it was not reasonable to suppose that Ross would kill his chum for a few dollars when he knew that the crime must be fastened upon him.

Justice Mulock's charge to the jury was distinctly against the prisoner. The jury retired at 3.30 and returned at 4.30 with a verdict of guilty. Judge Mulock, in discharging the jury, remarked: "You have performed a painful duty, like good and true men." Sentence was deferred until to-day.

Saul Gouin was then placed on trial, charged with the murder of Mary E. Smith, a jury being secured after 16 challenges by the defence and five by the crown. Nov. 12, 1908, Ethel Crawford and Mary Smith, living in a shack near Cobalt, were severely injured by an axe in the hands of Gouin, Mary Smith dying in a Toronto hospital eight months later. Ethel Crawford is the principal crown witness. Self-defence is alleged; Gouin stating that the women attacked him with a revolver because he would not spend his money with them. He is defended by T. W. McGarry, K.C., and G. L. T. Bull.

The presence in court of the prisoner's wife and 11 children gives added interest. The court house has been packed to suffocation at each session, with a number of women in attendance.

EXPLANATIONS BY 'SBARRETTI

Canadian Apostollic Delegate Discusses Roosevelt Affair.

Ottawa, April 8.—The following statement is given to the press by Monsignor Sbarretti, the Apostolic delegate:

"In view of the attitude assumed by a certain portion of the press in this country with regard to the recent incident connected with Col. Roosevelt's visit to Rome, I feel it my duty to make a brief statement of facts that will help to enlighten public opinion as to the stand taken by the Holy See.

"The position assumed and maintained, irrespective of persons, by the Vatican authorities, is simply the only one compatible with dignity and self-respect. There is involved no question of tolerance or intolerance with regard to religious views, as such, for there are continually being admitted to audience with the holy father non-Catholics of every denomination, and even pagans.

"The attitude of those Methodists in Rome towards the Vatican, their bitter and aggressive antagonism to the Catholic faith, and the Holy See, and their misrepresentation and vilification of the holy father, in order to pervert the poor and simple, have imposed the line of action adopted towards them. The violent and fanatical tone of the declaration published broadcast by the press as received from a prominent member of this Methodist proselytizing mission, and the grossly-insulting language quoted from an American leader of that sect, against one of the most distinguished and respected members of the American heirarchy, tend sufficiently to confirm the wisdom and prudence of the action taken in their regard."

The arrival of heavy reinforcements has enabled the Turkish troops to temporarily check the advance of the Clansmen who have been threatening Pristine, but it was only after severe fighting for two days.

The London Times, in an editorial on President Taft's position, says that it is not so certain as people are inclined to think that Roosevelt himself, had he remained in power, would have done any better than Taft is doing.

Bishop Dontenville, director-general of the Oblate Order, who is in Ottawa, will go to London, Ont., on the 25th, to attend the consecration of Bishop Fallon. He will visit Montreal, and possibly Toronto, before returning to Rome.

CHALLENGE TO A PITTSBURG EDITOR

Pittsburg, Pa., April 8.—District Attorney Blakeley last night issued a general invitation for any one or all of the residents of Alleghany County to appear before the grand jury today to contribute any secrets they may hold about grafting in Pittsburg. The invitation is especially directed towards Alexander P. Moore, editor of The Pittsburg Leader, which, in an editorial yesterday, charged that a prominent man, known to the writer of the editorial, as was stated, was still to be implicated in the graft scandals as the real "man higher up."

UNIONVILLE GIRL'S TERRIBLE DEATH

Unionville, April 8.—Through her clothes becoming ignited while working around the kitchen stove, Eva, eldest daughter of John F. Davison, postmaster and general merchant of this village, was so frightfully burned about 10.30 yesterday morning that her death supervened about five hours later.

Miss Davison was engaged in melting some beeswax and turpentine, and when attempting to remove the pan it upset, scattering some of the fluid over the stove, the contents catching fire, which in turn instantly communicated to the young woman's clothing.

AUTHORSHIP IS REVEALED

London, April 8.—In an autobiographic article in Blackwoods Magazine, Sir Robert Anderson admits authorship of the famous Parnellism and Crime series of articles published in The Times in 1887. Sir Robert was then advisor to the Home Office, and later, during the proceedings of the Parnell Commission, became head of the investigation department of Scotland Yard.

In 1886 Gladstone formed a Parliamentary alliance with Parnell, and proposed a home rule bill, which caused a split in the Liberal party and restored Lord Salisbury to power. The Times sought to discredit home rule before the country by publishing a series of articles in which it tried to connect Parnell with Phoenix Park murders and other assassinations. It published letters alleged to have been written by Parnell, which were proved, before a committee appointed by Parliament, to have been forged by one Pigott.

RINGS WERE FOUND BY LITTLE GIRL

Chatham, April 8.—The $300 worth of rings which were supposed to have been stolen at the Grand Trunk depot Wednesday were yesterday morning found by Patrolman Dodson on the fingers of Permilla Smale, a girl 14 years of age.

The girl was at the station when the train came in carrying the rings from London. The package evidently fell off the baggageman's truck and the girl found it. Her father, who is near-sighted, thought they were brass and worthless.

This bears out the story told by Baggageman Hazlett, who was arrested, charged with theft, and who denied ever having seen the package.

EXCITING PURSUIT OF BANK ROBBERS

Chicago, April 8.—Five masked bandits, escaping with $2,000 stolen from the Bank of Coal City at Coal City, Ills., exchanged shots with a posse yesterday, three of the robbers being wounded and captured. Coal City is 63 miles southwest of Chicago.

The marauders entered the town on a passing freight train and began operations by tying Barney Ghetto, the night watchman, and Washington Frye, the night engineer of the electric plant. Then they blew up the bank building and shattered the safe with a great charge of nitro-glycerine, and leaped on a freight train with their plunder, which was partly in stamps.

As the train pulled out Ghetto succeeded in cutting his bonds and telephone Eugene Miller, the night watchman at Mazeon, seven miles south of Coal City, who, with Dr. E. D. Watts, lay in wait for the robbers. When the train reached Mazeon, and stopped to switch cars, the bandits leaped from the car and hid in a clump of shrubbery near the track.

Miller and the physician opened fire, which was promptly returned, about 25 shots being exchanged. When the train started the bandits leaped aboard and again escaped.

Immediately the sheriff of Morris was notified. Several automobiles were pressed into service, and the pursuit began, the machines following a road along the Santa Fe right of way. When the train came to a stop at Verona, near Morris, the cars were searched by the sheriff and his men.

Three of the fugitives, wounded, were found in an empty baggage car.

DETECTIVE GIVES STRONG EVIDENCE

Valleyfield, Que., April 8.—Detective Lapointe gave strong evidence yesterday at the trial of Houlo brothers for the murder of Farmer Pelletier.

Witness said that when he brought the two accused men back from the States, they confessed to having been hunting the morning of the murder, and that they had fired several shots. Lapointe also testified that the gun he found in the house of one of the accused fitted exactly when placed in the hole the murderers made in the barn door, through which the fatal shots were fired.

Another witness, named Reid, said that one of the other brothers threatened him this week, and warned him against testifying.

RAILWAY BOARD HAS THE POWER

Ottawa, April 8.—The railway committee of the Commons yesterday decided that Claude Macdonnel's bill to amend the Railway Act by making clear the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission in regard to control of commutation rates charged by the railways was unnecessary in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Brampton and Oakville cases.

LORD BERESFORD AND CANADIAN TRADE

London, April 8. (C.A.P. Cable.)—Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, M.P., yesterday published a pamphlet giving advice for the development of British trade with Canada.

The recommendations include the securing of a first-class resident commercial traveler, the distribution of catalogues and advertisements in Canadian style, longer terms of credit, quick shipping maintenance of larger stocks, and the establishment of a branch of industries in the Dominion.

INCURABLY ILL, ENDS HIS LIFE

New York, April 8.—Standing a few feet from the window of his bedroom on the fifth floor of a fashionable Lennox avenue apartment house, Harry Cohan, a former diamond broker, leaped forward headlong, crashed through the glass, and plunged to the concrete pavement below. Cohan learned last week that he was incurably ill.

Dynamite Explosion Causes Havoc.

Tokio, April 8.—A lighter loaded with dynamite in the harbor of Kobe, caught fire yesterday, causing an explosion that killed three persons, wrecked many houses on the waterfront, and caused a monetary damage of $250,000.

AN OPERATOR DESERTED WIRE

Regina, Sask., April 8.—Another case of alleged desertion, from duty on the part of a C.P.R. operator came to light yesterday, when Wm. Voyer, night operator, was arrested. Voyer, it is said, left his key without warning Wednesday night, his post being vacant for 25 minutes, while the station agent was being located to take his place.

WESTERN TOWN IN PERIL FROM FIRE

Lanigan, Sask., April 8.—This town had the narrowest escape in its history from almost total destruction by a prairie fire. Mothers with their babies were placed in the centre of the racetrack, and every man and woman worked to put out the fire. Several of the workers fell exhausted. Several sheds and stables were burned.

Hawes to Testify.

Edmonton, Alta., April 8.—Alfred Hawes, Toronto, has been summoned to appear before the commission investigating the Great Waterways Railroad. As yet no writ has been issued on his behalf against President Clarke or J. K. Cornwall, to recover the quarter million dollars which he claims.

WOMAN IDENTIFIES HER ASSAILANT

London, April 8.—Miss Elizabeth Frank yesterday morning identified John Prodgers as the man who fired four shots at her on Tuesday afternoon.

About ten years ago Prodgers was on trial as ringleader of a gang which broke into the home of W. Goodwin, aged 80, and placed the old man on a stove and tortured him to make him reveal his money. He is a very powerful man.

UNITED STATES RAILWAYS HAVE REDUCED RATES

Washington, D.C., April 8.—In what is believed to be an effort to divert some of the export grain traffic, which usually moves through Canada, to some of the Atlantic seaports in the United States, the trunk lines operating from Buffalo to the seaboard have filed reductions in their grain tariffs with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The reductions will apply only to grain for export.

Halifax, N.S., April 8.—The Senate of the Halifax Presbyterian College have decided to confer the degree of D.D. on Prof. McFadyen of Knox College, Toronto.

It is understood that Prof. McFadyen will succeed Prof. George Adam Smith of Glasgow University, who is to become president of Aberdeen University.

The Canadian church is making strenuous efforts to retain Prof. McFadyen in Canada.

EXAMPLE OF THE FOUNDERS

Young men who are just beginning to take an interest in politics would do well to study the lives and speeches of the founders of the Conservative party, Sir John Macdonald, D'Arcy McGee, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Leonard Tilley and their associates. They were always careful to say nothing that could in any way stir up strife between men of different races and religions. They had a difficult problem to deal with. The future of Canada was very uncertain. Quebec and Ontario were divided by race and religion. The Maritime Provinces were separated from the populated district of Central Canada by a long stretch of wild country, without railway communication between them. There was almost no social or commercial intercourse between the provinces down by the sea and Ontario and Quebec. The great Northwest was entirely undeveloped. The work these great Conservative statesmen accomplished in welding the country together was marvelous. They could never have succeeded had they not made the fundamental principle of the party a policy of broad toleration and kindliness for men of all races and creeds.

Mr. Robert L. Borden, the Conservative leader to-day, is a man of the same stamp. He has always shown a spirit of tolerance. He has never uttered a word that could wound the feelings or hurt the pride of Protestant or Roman Catholic, French or English.

All young men, whether Conservatives or Liberals, should follow the example of these great leaders in this regard.

Let us remember that we are all Canadians and work together for the good of the nation.

HOME TRADE AND FOREIGN

The Toronto Globe is not satisfied with the Review's dissection of its balance of trade theories. It admits that if a Douro farmer sells wool at the Peterborough mills and buys locks for his house at the local factory the country gets the whole profit. It admits that the farmer, the woollen mills and the lock factory are benefitted, and there are no trade statistics. But it says:

"If the farmer sells his wool in Bradford (England) and crowds out as much from Australia, the Peterborough mills buy the crowded-out fleeces from Australia, the farmer buys his locks from Germany, and the local factory supplies the want then created by filling a similar order in Argentina, the people of Peterborough and of this country will be in exactly the same position as under the former transaction."

Let any farmer examine these two systems of trading thus placed side by side for comparison, and consider whether the home trading is not less complex and more sensible than the foreign trading, even if all these roundabout and far-extending transactions can be made.

But let the Toronto Globe give the Review and Peterborough County farmers an answer to these questions: Suppose that the Peterborough woollen mills were shut down and the Douro farmer, being unable to sell his wool in the local market, found that he could not sell it in Bradford, England, or anywhere else, in competition with Australian wool, would he be in exactly the same position as if the Peterborough mill were running full time, and ready to buy all the wool he could produce? Suppose that the Peterborough lock manufacturer, whose locks were displaced by German locks, found that he could not sell them in distant Argentina, and consequently shut down his factory, would the people of Peterborough be in exactly the same position? How about the Peterborough workmen thrown out of employment? Would they go to Germany to find work? Would the Globe pay their passage across the ocean? How about the houses left vacant in Peterborough? What compensation would the landlords receive for the loss of rent? Would Peterborough merchants be able to sell groceries, dry goods, boots and shoes, furniture and hardware to the workmen in Germany or to the farmers of Argentina? Would the carpenters and builders, the plasterers, painters and paper-hangers, the dressmakers, milliners and tailors, who now do work for the people employed in the mills and factories of Peterborough and their families, be in exactly the same position if our local industries ceased to exist?

THINGS WE CAN'T PRODUCE

In replying to The Review The Toronto Globe again trots out its theory that if protectionist principles were carried out to their logical conclusion we would put a high tariff on oranges. It believes that this would be just as sensible as putting a high tariff on locks, electrical appliances or woollens. It says: "Canada can grow oranges and the southern countries can grow apples. Such exotic growing would create gigantic industries employing many men."

As a matter of fact protectionists have always argued that so far as the necessities of revenue will permit, all articles that cannot be economically produced in the country should be admitted free of duty. There may be difference of opinion sometimes as to what can be economically produced, but there can be no doubt about oranges, tea, coffee and many other articles of consumption. Protectionists contend that such articles should be on the free list. By a mutual arrangement with other countries of the British Empire, which can produce these things, it may be desirable to place a duty on them when imported from foreign countries, but that is merely an application of the principle of protection to the whole Empire.

It is the theory of English free-traders that articles which cannot be produced in the country are the very ones that should be selected for high duties. Enormously high duties are levied on tea and coffee imported into the United Kingdom. A protectionist Government of Canada took the duties off tea and coffee because they could not be produced in Canada.

SUMMER RESORTS OF ONTARIO

Experience, the testimony of thousands and the popularity of the several fishing, hunting and tourist districts located on the lines of the Grand Trunk Railway System, is conclusive proof that they are the Elysium of the sportsman and the Mecca par excellence of the tourist.

The "Highlands of Ontario" is a land dotted with lakes and rivers, rivers that have their source in the northern forests, and flow until they join the vast inland seas, Superior, Huron, Erie or Ontario, whose waters are in turn borne by the broad St. Lawrence to the Atlantic Ocean. This great tourist railway reaches all the principal resorts in this vast territory, including Lakes Orilla and Couchiching, the Muskoka Lakes, a popular resort one thousand feet above the sea level, where thousands of people annually make their summer homes for rest and recuperation. The Lake of Bays District, where some of the finest summer hotels in Canada are to be found, and a locality replete with natural beauty and loveliness, with splendid fishing; Magnetawan River, the very heart-centre for sport, for rod and gun; Lake Nipissing and the French River, where wild and rugged scenery is to be found, and the atmosphere filled with health-giving properties; the Temagami Region, a forest reserve containing 3,750,000 acres of lakes, rivers and wilderness, the scenic grandeur of which is incomparable. Magnificent fishing and hunting in season. The 30,000 islands of Georgian Bay form another most delightful and beautiful territory, where the most interesting trips may be taken. The steady increase of tourists to this locality is alone proof that it is becoming the most popular resort on the inland lakes. The Algonquin National Park of Ontario, a comparatively new and attractive region, little known to the lover of rod and gun and the tourist, has all the summer attractions that appeal to the denizen of the city. This territory has been set aside by the Provincial Government of Ontario solely for the delectation of mankind. The gamiest of black bass, speckled trout and salmon trout are found here in goodly numbers. Hunting is not allowed. The Algonquin Park covers an area of 2,000,000 acres, there being no less than 1,200 lakes and rivers within its boundaries.

Good hotel accommodation is found in all the districts mentioned, and a postal card addressed to the District Passenger Agent's Office, Grand Trunk, Toronto, Ont., or to the General Advertising Department, Grand Trunk Railway System, Montreal, will receive prompt attention, and illustrated publications of any of the districts will be quickly sent to all enquirers.

Mayor Matthews sent to President Taft the first wireless message from Port Arthur.

SEED CORN EVANGELIST.

How Professor Holden Taught Iowa Farmers to Plant Good Grain.

One day in 1904 an Iowa college professor worked out a problem in arithmetic which caused him to catch some of the zeal which the evangelists had caught in their training schools, and he resolved on a campaign in behalf of yellow and white, variegated and red, dent and flint, Indian corn, almost as unusual as that adopted by the traveling evangelists who had been calling men to account for the waste of life by wickedness.

Professor Holden's little problem showed the farms were increasing in value because of the new and complex development and new armies of pioneers pushing into the west. At the rate they were producing the best would soon stop "paying dividends" on a valuation of $100 per acre.

Thirty years ago, with land worth $8 to $20 per acre, a farmer did not need to be as careful as he must be today, when the same land is worth from $75 to $150 per acre. "There must be better farming in the middle west, and one way to do it is to go out among the farmers and show them that the 'book farmers' in the agricultural colleges are practical farmers—that they are capable of making more than a living on forty acres and would not starve to death on 160 acres, as the farmers say sometimes," said Holden after having thought the matter over.

Other men were giving thought to the same problem of rising land values and lagging production. As early as 1896 Henry Wallace, editor of Wallace's Farmer, in company with State Dairy Commissioner Boardman, had made a trial of the special train as an educational agent in a campaign for the stimulation of dairy interest through the Des Moines valley. Now the former and Superintendent Given of the Rock Island road turned their attention to the corn question. They called Professor Holden into their councils. It was at once manifest that he was the ideal executive—the man to do the work.

Accordingly Professor Holden planned a campaign in Iowa with the assistance of railroad managers. He would take a special train and go out on the railroads where he could meet the farmers and show them that science only simplifies.

Professor Holden's plan was not to go into plant breeding, but to confine himself largely to insisting that the farmers plant selected seed corn, seed which had been tested in a simple device which could be made in any farm workshop. Given this hint in lectures and by the use of charts, the Iowa educator believed the direct result would be instantaneous, while the fairyland of science would be opened a little way to the farmers, and they would realize after the first year or two of experimenting that by harnessing up and using the forces of heredity in corn and other farm crops production could be greatly increased and consequently the profits of farming become greater, the land "pay dividends" on a higher valuation, because brains had been mixed with muscle in meeting the seasons.

The work Professor Holden proposed to do was evangelistic, and when his trains were started down the long lines of shimmering steel they became known as "seed corn gospel trains."

Some of the figures Professor Holden presented were startling, but they sent large audiences of farmers away from the meetings pledged never again to select seed corn from a crib with a scoop shovel.

How a Bear Fishes.

Few people have had the opportunity of seeing a bear feeding—that is, in his native state—and fewer still have seen him fishing. But fish he does, and in it he displays an amount of patience and dexterity that is amazing. He will lie motionless upon an overhanging log or bank with paw poised and little beady eyes attentively scanning the water. Salmon and trout are his chief delight, and, should one come near enough to the surface, he is snapped out on the bank with a flip and a twist, and vanishes in Bruin's capacious maw.

A Nautical Explanation.

The officers were on the quarter-deck looking at a comet and noticed an eager discussion among the crew forward. The captain called one of the men aft and asked him what was the subject of discussion.

"We were trying to make out what that there thing was," replied the man, pointing to the comet.

"And what do you imagine it is?"

"Dunno, your honor, but Bill Jones here, as knows most things, says as how it's a star that's sprung a leak."

Remedy For Potato Blight.

An effectual remedy for potato blight has been found in bordeaux mixture, which consists of four pounds of copper sulphate and five or six pounds of fresh lime in sixty gallons of water. This remedy is also effectual against what is known as the early blight, which attacks the early varieties, while the late blight seldom appears before the first of August and does not attack the late kinds unless they are planted late in the season. This mixture can be used in connection with paris green or arsenate of lead for the potato beetle. The arsenical article is especially valuable, as it does not burn the foliage and adheres so firmly that it is not easily washed off by rain. When spraying with this in connection with the bordeaux mixture, use two pounds of the arsenate to fifty gallons, and use when the beetles first appear. This will prove very effective, though if other beetles appear later in the season it will be necessary to spray again in order to protect the growth made after the first application.

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Siege of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

A sound came from George like the low growl of a dog. Trafford put out his hand to repress it."

"Let him go on," he muttered. "This is the most remarkable wooing I ever heard of."

"Yes; it has to be," Winship agreed. "But I want to put things in a way which will admit of no future doubt. I want to put them justly too. So when I say that Miss Trafford knew these things I don't mean that she was able to formulate them to herself as facts. She was only convinced of them in her inner sense of rectitude. Her love and loyalty remain with you; her verdict and her sympathy have long ago gone out to me and mine. Do I make myself clear? I repeat that if it hadn't been for the situation that you yourself created your daughter and I would probably have passed each other by as strangers."

"And, since you haven't done that," Trafford broke in impatiently, "I'm here to say that I'm willing to make the best of it. You've fallen in love with each other, as I understand, and though I don't look upon it as the most brilliant match my daughter could make, I'm ready to swallow my own disappointment in order that she should be as happy as possible. I'm ready to make you rich. I'm ready to make your sister rich. What's the use of dragging up a lot of unfortunate rubbish at the very minute when we could put everything right again? If it's folly to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs, it's surely criminal to strangle the poor dove that comes with the olive branch of peace."

"It isn't the peace I object to, but the terms of the treaty."

"My God! Don't I offer you enough?"

"Yes; too much. I ask only for your daughter's hand, empty of dower."

"Look here! Do you mean to tell me that you think of marrying my child and supporting her out of your miserable painter's pittance?"

"Since you choose to put it so, yes."

"Then you're mad. It's out of the question. It's preposterous. She's lived like a princess all her life. She'd spend in a day all that you could give her in a year."

"I think not. I think she'd be content with what I could offer her."

"But, for the love of heaven, why should she? Here's money to squander, money to throw away, money to burn up."

"It's money I couldn't touch. It's money I couldn't allow my wife to touch. It's the money for which too many widows and orphans are still clamoring. It's the money for which too many beggared men are still cursing the sound of your name. It's the money that came when old Marshall of Turtonville shot himself, and Rawson of Fitchburg hanged himself, and Brewer of Albany went mad and Bennett of Cleveland became a forger, and Jackson of Ohio stabbed your agent and got penal servitude for life, and Lewis of Philadelphia died a drunkard, and Barnes"—

"That's enough!" Trafford cried sternly, holding up his hand.

"I know it's enough." Winship threw back. "I could go on with the list and make it much longer without mentioning my own father's name. But that's enough. You can finish it no doubt for yourself. Such names are not easily forgotten."

Trafford sprang to his feet and strode away from the group. With his hands behind his back and his head bent, he took two or three paces across the room. Marsh had scarcely changed her position since the conversation began. Laura sat biting her lip and looking at the floor. George, grasping the arms of his chair, was like a bulldog held in leash and straining to spring at the man opposite, who was apparently the least concerned among them all.

Trafford strode back to the group again.

"You're a clever man, Mr. Winship," he said, tapping with his fingers on the table. "You're an ingenious man. You've had a blow to strike at me, and you've chosen the weapon you knew to be the sharpest."

"I didn't choose it," Winship returned quietly. "It came into my hand."

"But you know how it cuts."

"Yes, I do know that."

"And you have no scruple about thrusting the blade in."

"The whole world has learned from you, Mr. Trafford, that scruples belong only to the weak. I must call your attention again to the fact that the circumstances are not of my making, but your own. I didn't seek to love your daughter. I must say again and again that we were brought together in consequence of your own acts. Now that I do love her I want to marry her. That's natural enough. But I can't touch your money. No honorable man could. It's blood money. But there, again, if that knife cuts you it's one of your own forging, not of mine. It isn't the first time the conquered have been avenged by the very cruelty of the conquest. 'To Victo' is a song the world has heard over and over again."

"Humph! Blood money! It's blood money, is it? And you want my child to say so?"

"I want her to be true to what I know are already her own high and holy convictions."

"You want her to choose between you and me before the world. Then, by heaven, she shall!" he cried, bringing his fist down upon the table.

He marched to the end of the long room and threw open a door.

"Paula!" he called loudly. "Paula, come here!"

When he rejoined the group he was very pale. Instinctively they all rose as Paula appeared in the doorway.

For an instant she seemed to hesitate, her dark figure framed in the arch of white and gold. Then she came forward a step or two and paused. She seemed doubtful of what they expected her to do. They could see that her eyes were aglow, her cheeks delicately flushed and her lips parted in a half smile. She was in black, with a row of black pearls in the frill around her throat.

The silence and immobility with which the group about the table regarded her approach soon began to bewilder her. She looked from one to another questioningly, and her smile faded.

"What is it?" she asked, pausing again before she had quite reached them.

"Paula, my child," Trafford said, "I've given my consent to your marriage with Mr. Winship, and I've not withdrawn it."

The half smile came back. Her eyes sought Winship's. Then the droop of the long black lashes hid them again.

"But Mr. Winship," Trafford pursued, "is not satisfied with my consent. He asks for more."

"No, not for more," Winship corrected. "I ask for nothing."

"Mr. Winship asks for so little, dear, that it becomes significantly much."

"I don't understand at all, papa."

"Then I'll put it to you plainly. Mr. Winship is ready to marry you, but you must come to him empty handed."

"I shouldn't care," she said promptly. "I don't mind about the money, not at all. I know what Roger means. He wants every one to see that it's for myself, not for anything else."

"That isn't quite his motive, dear. But perhaps he could explain it better than I can. Will you be good enough," he added, turning to Winship, "to tell my daughter why it is that you'd shut her out from the provision I've worked so hard to save for her?"

"If Miss Trafford is willing to make the sacrifice it seems to me the explanation becomes unnecessary."

"I don't want an explanation, papa; I really don't."

"I think you'd better have it none the less," Trafford insisted. "If he won't give it I will. Mr. Winship will not touch my money nor allow you to touch it because it's blood money."

"Oh, don't, papa," the girl pleaded—"don't tell me!"

"I must tell you, dear. The time has come when you've got to make a choice—when you've got to decide between my enemies and me."

"But Roger isn't your enemy!"

"You'll see. He wants you to stand forth before the world and declare that in your opinion I am a robber, an assassin."

"No, no," Winship cried. "That's not fair. That's not what I ask for. I ask only that she shall come to me as she is—without money, without dower. I'm not trying to force her into putting any construction on the act."

"And I'm not splitting hairs," Trafford interrupted scornfully. "I'm not drawing nice philosophical distinctions. If she doesn't put a construction on the act you will and the world will. Paula, darling, he wants you to refuse my money because it's blood money. Those are his words. He wants you to marry him without a penny. Then every one will be able to say that Paul Trafford must be what his enemies and traducers have called him, because his own daughter thinks him so."

"Oh, no, Roger; you don't mean that!"

"He means more, dearest. He means that, as you are all I have, so even that shall be taken from me."

"But I couldn't be!"

"That's for you to decide, dear, and to decide now. He knows that I could bear up against the world, whatever it might say, whatever it might be led to believe. But he knows, too, that what I couldn't bear up against is that you should say, 'Papa, I can't touch your money, I can't touch your hand, because they're full of blood.'"

"Roger, I wish you'd speak," she pleaded. "I wish you'd tell me yourself what it all means."

"How can I tell you?" he asked, moving toward her with hands outstretched as if in petition. "Can't you guess? Can't you see? Don't you know how this stupendous fortune has been brought together? Don't you know that it's been by every form of financial juggiery the mind has been able to invent? Don't you know that it's been by ways as crooked as they were cruel? Don't you know that it's been by a system of depredation so gigantic that even the common opinion of the common world has risen in revolt against it?"

"You lie!" George Trafford shouted. It was as if the bulldog had torn away from its leash and sprung at Winship's throat.

"Be quiet, George," Laura begged.

"Stand back!" Winship said in a tone of authority. "I'm here to explain to Miss Trafford, the woman I love and who loves me. I lie, do I? Then why have you Traffords and your monopolies been hunted from court to court throughout the whole land of America? Why is the press ringing daily with your name and calling for justice against you? Why have you been driven to every legal shift in order to dodge or twist or circumvent the law? Why have you spent millions to buy up clever men, to corrupt politicians, to bribe a press and to purchase a little public that might stand by you?

"You have no friends but paid friends and no standing except among those who are overawed by the brutality of your power. Even so, no one knows better than yourselves that that power will not stand a day when once the moral wits of the people are awakened. No one knows better than yourselves that the very sycophants of your success will be the first to rejoice in your downfall. And yet you—a Trafford—dare to tell me that I lie! Dear Paula," he went on in another tone, turning again to the girl, who stood listening, with white face and terrified eyes—"dear Paula, I'm saying nothing new. It's only what's notorious to the world. You're the only person perhaps on earth who doesn't know it all. If it had been possible to keep it from you, I should have done it. But it isn't possible. Sooner or later you must have learned it. Don't you understand, then, that when I see you in the midst of all this"—he threw out his arms with a wide gesture—"it's as if I saw you living in, clothed in, the ruin of beggared men and hungry women and children? When I see you in your splendor, your pearls are to me like their tears, your rubies like their sweat of blood. I can't bear it. I can't bear it. It's like desecration. It's like sacrilege. I must take you out of it. Oh, come away! Come away!"

"And leave my father?"

"You needn't leave him. You need only leave—all this."

"Is there no way by which love could make some—some reconciliation?"

"None."

"Then, papa," she said in a dull tone, "I'm your daughter. If I have to make the choice, it must be you."

She moved across the room to his side, slipping her arm into his.

Winship raised his hands again, with their petitioning gesture, but before the look of pathetic reproach in her eyes he let them fall again.

"Paula," Trafford said in a voice that shook a little, "I've let this man speak. You've heard him to the end. Now tell him that you believe in me. Tell him that his charges have failed."

"Oh, papa," she returned wearily, "how can it matter what I say? I'm so tired of it all. I give him up. I'm going to stay with you. Isn't that enough?"

Winship could see, as he had seen once before, the ashen hue steal over Trafford's face.

"Yes, dear," he murmured, dropping his daughter's hand, "I suppose it is enough. It will have to be."

There was a minute's pause and then a simultaneous movement. The Winships were going away. Paula gave a little start as of one awakening.

"Couldn't we be alone together," she begged, looking round among them all, "just for a minute?"

It was Laura who somehow got them from the room. Winship and Paula stood confronting each other. He remained at a distance, looking at her with burning eyes.

"Roger," she faltered—"Roger, would it be useless to make one more appeal to you? Must our love end like this?"

"Our love doesn't end. Our love can't end."

"But all the rest of it, all our happiness—is it to be flung away for this? How could you expect me to turn my back upon my father? It would kill him."

"Oh, Paula," he said, coming toward her, "I didn't ask for that! Don't turn your back on him. Love him always as you've loved him, only come to me. Renounce all this that's so unworthy of you and come to me without—the money."

"I can't, Roger. Don't you see that I can't? Whatever the money is, even if it's all you say, I can't separate myself from it now. It's bound up with my father, and I'm bound up with him. I've got to carry the weight of it. It seems to me that if you loved me you'd come and help me bear it."

"You've only to think of what that would mean to see how impossible it would be—you and I living together in splendid luxury on"—

"No, don't!" she cried. "Don't say it again. Once has seared the words right into my heart. I shall always feel them burning there. Then, Roger, if you can't," she added hopelessly, "there's nothing for it but to part. I must go my way with my father, even though I fall in it. God will help me perhaps to stumble on. I must leave you now. I can't stay. It's killing me. Goodby, goodby."

She held out her hand. He dropped on his knee and pressed it to his lips.

Almost before he had risen he found himself alone.

It was a dreary little party that assembled in the small family salon that evening before dinner. Laura's eyes were red; George tried to hide himself behind his paper; Trafford turned his back on them, pretending to look down at the stream of carriages coming from the Bois. In the condition of nervous tension to which they were all wrought up a little scream from Laura was enough to make them start.

"For pity's sake!" she cried. "Paula, are you crazy?"

Paula stood in the doorway. She was dressed in some shimmering stuff like tissue of gold. On her head she wore the high, round diamond crown her mother had bequeathed her, a collar of rubies was clasped about her throat, a girdle of diamonds and rubies encircled her waist, diamonds and rubies were on her arms, while round her neck she had the rows upon rows of the famous Trafford pearls. Her rose-like color was bright, her eyes shone, and she smiled valiantly.

"And leave my father?"

"Heaven, what a vision!" Trafford muttered under his breath as he watched her from the embrasure of the window.

"Well, you have rigged yourself up!" George commented, looking up at her over his paper with a sort of savage reproach. "What's the idea?"

"Really, Paula," Laura protested, "I don't think you ought to"—

"Let her alone," Trafford commanded, striding forward. "I know what she means, don't I, dear?"

"I hope so, papa"—she smiled as she let him take her into his arms—"because it's my profession of faith. I wear them because they're your gifts."

She came into the room, and the conversation turned on the degree to which the jewels suited her. The commonplace topic relieved the strain, and the evening passed in a sort of artificial cheerfulness. It was not till they were parting for the night that Laura found the moment for a private word with her.

"I wouldn't force myself if I were you, dear," she advised.

"I have to," Paula replied, with arms uplifted in the act of taking off her crown. "I couldn't do it without forcing myself. But I shall be equal to it, Laura. I'm not afraid of breaking down. Only you must help me. You must laugh when I do, and we must both talk brightly. I want papa to think I've done it easily. If he doesn't, he'll be unhappy, and everything will be in vain."

"God bless you, dear," Laura murmured as she kissed her. "God bless you, and bless you again."

WENT ON STRIKE FOR MORE MONEY

Lindsay, April 8.—This morning at 9 o'clock about thirty laborers employed on the construction work at the locks refused to go to work until they received $1.75 a day.

A reporter visited the works to-day and interviewed Mr. Robert Fee, in charge of the contract. He stated that no demand had been made on either Contractor Ritchie or himself for an increase, and the action of the men in refusing to go to work came as a surprise. The wages paid on the work ranged from $1.50 to $3.00 a day.

At noon about fifteen of the men returned to work, and a number are expected to return to-morrow morning.

David Mulligan, the Ottawa youth who assaulted Dr. Sian of the Chinese consulate, was fined $10 and costs.

PETERBOROUGH LADY DIED AT PORT CARLING

The news of the death at Port Carling, Ont., of Bertha Laur Kidd, wife of Rev. J. W. Fox, Methodist minister of that place, has caused deep regret in the city. She passed away on Wednesday, April 6th, at the age of thirty-four. She was a daughter of Mr. A. R. Kidd, of the staff of the local customs house, and was married to Mr. Fox eight years ago. Mr. Fox has been in charge of the Methodist church at Port Carling for the past four years. In addition to her husband and four children, three girls and one boy, Mrs. Fox is survived by her father and mother, three sisters and two brothers. The sisters are Miss Maggie Kidd, and Mrs. Alex. Stewart, of this city, and Mrs. George Ingham, of Roseneath, and the brothers are Mr. R. H. Kidd, of Port Angeles, Wash., and Mr. A. O. Kidd, of Peterborough. They will have the sincere sympathy of a wide circle of friends in the great loss they have sustained. Mrs. Fox possessed many stirling qualities and was highly esteemed by every one who knew her.

The funeral will take place on Sunday at 1.30 o'clock, from the residence of her father, 45 Crescent street, to Little Lake cemetery. A short funeral service will be held at the house, conducted by the Rev. J. G. Brown, of St. James church.

HIGH SCHOOL EXAM. DATES

June 22-24 Period Fixed for the Entrance Tests—Department Issues a Circular

The annual examinations for high school and entrance in Peterborough, and throughout the province, will be held on June 22, 23 and 24, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The matriculation and teachers' examinations will be held from June 27 to July 12. Announcement to this effect has been received by the local school inspectors.

As regards the high school entrance examinations, composition, spelling and geography will be the subjects for the first day, arithmetic and reading for the second and English grammar and writing for the third, while oral reading will be taken on one of the afternoons.

In connection with the announcements the following memorandum, issued by the Ontario Department of Education in regard to the method of conducting the high school entrance examinations, is of interest.

"The high and continuation school inspectors report that in some of the schools under their charge the attainments of the pupils who have been admitted are defective and inadequate and that in their judgment some of the high school entrance boards have not set a proper standard in valuing the answer papers. In this connection the minister reminds entrance boards that while they are at liberty to make special provision for admission in special individual cases they are not at liberty, without the concurrence of the minister, to lower the 40 per cent. minimum on any subject or the 60 per cent. minimum of the aggregate. Further, it has come to the minister's knowledge that in valuing the answer papers in arithmetic some boards have ignored the provision that no value whatsoever is to be assigned to certain questions unless the answers thereto are absolutely correct. The condition of affairs with which this memorandum deals is manifestly an injury to both the high schools and the public and separate schools, and it cannot be permitted to continue. The minister has accordingly directed the high and continuation school inspectors to report specially to him all cases in which there are evidences of laxity."

"THE CLIMAX" A FINE OFFERING

"The Climax," a play charming in its simplicity and tenderness, was given for the first time in Peterborough at the Grand last night, when it was presented by a talented and interesting company, under the direction of Joseph M. Webber. "The Climax" is unique, inasmuch as it treats of an entirely original subject, and treats of it, too, in a delightfully refreshing way.

Adelina Von Hagen, an impulsive and gifted young girl from a small Ohio town, comes to New York to have her voice cultivated, and makes up her mind to go on the operatic stage, as her mother had done before her. Luigi Golfanti, an old Italian vocal master, and formerly a grand opera baritone, sees great possibilities in her voice and enthusiastically and painstakingly instructs her in the vocal art with the conviction that some day she will be a great operatic song bird and win distinction for herself and her teacher. Pietro Golfanti, his son, a young composer, is enamored of Adelina, as is also Dr. John Raymond, a young doctor from the same town in Ohio as Adelina. While she is frank and friendly with them she doesn't respond to the affectionate advances of either, her heart and soul being wrapped up in her artistic future.

The old singing teacher notes a slight imperfection in her voice, and the doctor suggests that a delicate operation be performed by a specialist friend of his, which will be the means of correcting the defect with just one chance in a thousand that it may not have the desired result. The doctor, who is an apostle of mental suggestion, exercises this power when the girl tries to sing, after her throat is healed, following the operation, and she finds she cannot sing (when she attempts to. The grief of the girl and the utterly hopeless way in which she says, "I can't sing," are most pitiable, and in her despair she would have taken her life if not restrained by the timely intervention of Luigi, her teacher.

Eventually she is engaged to be married to the doctor, but just before the wedding ceremony is to take place she strums over the keys of the piano, and to the joy and surprise of herself and her teacher, finds she can sing. The young doctor, in a voluntary admission, tells her he tried to give the impression by mental suggestion, that she couldn't sing, as he wanted to keep her from the stage, toward which from the first she is strongly adverse from personal convictions, and wanted her to marry him. She denounces him for causing her the pain and grief he did, and in the conflicting battle between the old love for her vocal career and her new love for the doctor, she is drawn by the former, and the final curtain falls as he rushes into the arms of her old voice instructor and personal benefactor.

As Luigi Golfanti, the kindly singing master, Arthur Cosgrave made a direct appeal to the audience by his wonderfully human drawing of an attractive character part. Ann Swinburne made a charming and artless Adelina, and won unqualified approval by her charming and unaffected portrayal. In the songs incidental to the piece she displayed a soprano voice of excellent quality and considerable brilliancy. Chester Barnett as Pietro Golfanti, the young young musician, and Thomas Sinclair, as John Raymond, the doctor, both gave splendid readings of their roles. The former allowed himself to be an accomplished pianist, and his playing was a very entertaining feature of the drama.

Customs duties totalling $7,000 were collected at St. Catharines on 12 cars of paper making machinery.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY AN EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION

Lecture on Books and Borrowers by Mr. George H. Locke M. A, Before Canadian Club Was Rich in Humor and Instruction — The Last Meeting of the Season.

The Peterborough Canadian Club has in the course of lectures arranged for, secured interesting and prominent speakers, but it is safe to say that last night's address at the Hotel National, by Mr. George H. Locke, chief librarian of the Toronto Public Library, was one of the most appreciated of the year. It was also exceedingly timely, one reason being on account of its direct local importance. This city is soon to have completed a new public library. The all important question—what class of books will it contain—is a difficult one to handle, but it will be much more successfully dealt with as a result of the many splendid points brought out by the speaker of last evening. His subject "Books and Borrowers," he treated in a manner that pleased and instructed. He displayed rich humor and a seriousness which found a responsive chord with his representative auditors, and one and all joined in hearty applause when Mr. Locke took his seat at the conclusion of his lecture.

In the first part of the programme, the gathering did full justice to the excellent spread prepared by host Denison. The choice and varied menu was in inviting and appetizing one and up to the usual high standard of excellence.

The secretary of the club, Mr. D. Hughes-Charles called the meeting to order and read the minutes of the last meeting of the executive. These were confirmed and Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, the president introduced Mr. Locke as the speaker of the evening.

In his opening remarks Mr. Locke referred to the fact, that he had been connected with the Peterborough Collegiate Institute for two years, preceding Mr. Kenner. He was a librarian now and lived among books—a life which was a varied one, and by way of explaining the latter part of this statement the speaker told of two cases, where he had been asked for information. One man wanted to know if Sidney Lee, the Shakesperian critic, was a Jew, and a woman asked him what he knew of education during the third Napoleon. He next spoke on the work being accomplished by Canadian clubs, and of their importance as regarding Canada. He believed that such an institute where men from all walks of life, could meet and discuss all matters of national interest, was very desirable, and of great benefit. We are living in an age of undereducated and over-specialized men, said Mr. Locke. Men are trying to reach the top by short-cuts; that is by the least possible trouble. We are trying to eliminate those things, which are not an immediate necessity. That kind of education that gives judgment is lacking, and their is the lack of ability to handle oneself under trying conditions. What we want is men who can get ideas and then men who can put them into action. Both classes are wanted, but the man who can do both, is needed the most.

A public library in a community should secure the books which the individual cannot buy, and those should consist of that kind which helps and develops the reader. The public library is an educational institution in the community, and it should be erected in a conspicuous place, with the books so placed, that the man or woman can see them. It is the educational institute for those after leaving school. The average amount of schooling is five years; and yet we wonder why there are not more educated people. The boy who spends five years at school has only a small education, and the institution that is going to help him from that time on, is the public library. Some believe experience teaches. It does not. It is the most wastful and the hardest of all educations. What we need is to have some place where we can go and get the results of experience.

We question why the boy leaves town. There are no prospects for him. No provision made by having a public library, where he can find the books with which he can advance himself. There is an absence of this institution in many places, but it is not fair to the children to be handicapped with the lack of means by which they may develop. The boy who studies the possibilities of his trade is bound to be a success. After all, the difference between trade and profession is the difference between individuals. This is a tremendous commercial age and our boys and girls need an educational institute, such as the public library. Dealing with the question of what books the boy should read, Mr. Locke said that the boy growing up should be given a book in which something happens.

He may be a dime novel reader. It is a mistake to take that book away from him and give him one without any life. He should be given something with the same elements but put in a better shape. The reading of boys and girls is extremely important.

The public library comes in reach of those with leisure time. Some people think that certain places of amusement in which the young spend their leisure time, should be closed down, but without offering a substitute, it was not a fair proposition. Something should be put in their place.

The kind of books to be placed in a library he thought, should include those on applied science, biography, theology and philosophy, travels, geography and history, political and social science, and fiction.

Speaking on books of fiction, Mr. Locke held that some of the best, but only that class should occupy a place in a public library. Fiction was for the purpose of recreation.

He believed that great English newspapers should be represented in a public library. By securing both sides of the questions of the day, public opinion would be promoted and this was wanted.

Public libraries give an opportunity, a chance.

You have to train a boy so that he will know an opportunity, and on the other hand, you have to have the means of supplying that opportunity.

In bringing his lecture to a close Mr. Locke spoke briefly on Canadian literature. He remarked that while Canada has a small literature, it must be remembered that we are a young nation.

Mr. F. D. Kerr moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Locke for his lecture and this was seconded by Mr. Robt. Fair and enthusiastically carried and tendered to the speaker.

The meeting of last night was the last of the season. Several vocal and instrumental numbers were given before the gathering dispersed.

RUTH WHITE DIES IN NEW YORK

The following notice of the death of Ruth White, who appeared here in "The Tenderfoot," and "The Burgomaster" is taken from this week's Clipper:

Ruth White, an actress, died in New York city on March 28th, aged thirty-five years. Miss White was born in San Francisco, Cal., and made her first appearance on the stage in 1895, in "Trilby," with which she sang the "Bon Bolt," song, and played a minor role. Wilton Lackaye and Blanche Walsh were with this production. Miss White's next engagement was with the Henry W. Savage Opera Co., in Boston, where she remained several seasons, during which period she sang a varied list of roles. Other engagements were with Hammerstein's company at the Olympia, now the New York Theatre, with Henry E. Dixey, in a revival of "Adonis," at the Bijou etc. She then joined "The Burgomaster" Co., playing the part of Ruth, at the Manhattan Theatre, New York City. Shortly after she essayed the role of Nellie Van Astorbilt, in the same piece. In this part she made the biggest hit of her career, and for the past eight years she toured the country playing that role under the management of her husband, W. P. Cullen. She won general praise for her work in the character of Nellie. Miss White had also been with the Dearborn Theatre productions in Chicago, and with "The Explorers" and "The Stork," playing the prima donna roles. She was also for a season on tour in "The Tenderfoot," under Mr. Cullen's management. She is survived by her husband, Wm. P. Cullen; her father and mother. Funeral services were held Saturday, April 2nd, from the Campbell-Merritt Chapel on West Twenty-third street, New York.

Blind pig fines in Cobalt total over $4,000 this year so far.

LACROSSE

NO TEAM AT LINDSAY.

Lindsay will have no lacrosse team this season. That is a settled fact. The Post interviewed one of the most prominent lovers of the game Wednesday, and was informed that the proposition would not be entertained. It was too risky a nature and, besides, the lacrosse sentiment in the town was not sufficient to warrant jumping into the game.—Lindsay Post.

"ONE OPERA CLOAK, $250."

High Handed Methods Won Where Meekness Had Failed.

By FRANCESS GROFF.

Miss Lilian Fairweather's state of mind was far from pleasant as she sat in one of Schenck & Schenck's stuffy little fitting rooms. Nicholas the meek, Nicholas the downtrodden, had turned. The words of his letter stood out vividly before her eyes:

Jacob served seven years for Rachel and then got her sister. I have served five years, see no hope of getting you in seven, and you have no sister. Unless you say yes in a week to the question I have asked you so often I sail on the Mesaba for Europe. Remember, at a signal from you I shall turn back at the last moment, but my terms are unconditional surrender.

Nicholas had been the subject of gibes, both to his face and behind his back. One that she had coined she gave current issue among her friends because she fancied it was clever.

"Church on Sunday, theater Monday, flowers Tuesday, candy Wednesday, new book Thursday, dinner Friday, dead sick on Saturday of Nicholas Purdy."

It did not seem so clever to her now after a week during which there had been no one to carry her prayer book to church, no one to take her to first night performances, no flowers, no candy, no books, no dinners, no Nicholas Purdy, but there had been a wearied feeling. Much to her own surprise, she found that she missed the man more than his attentions.

This was the day of sailing for the Mesaba. From some feeling—curiosity, of course—she knew the pier from which it started, the car lines leading to it and the time it took to get there. She certainly would not give in to him, especially after the insolent tone of the letter. Yet it was from a fear that she might so far forget herself as to go down to the dock and lose her supremacy over Nicholas forever that had brought her here. Her suit very opportunely needed alteration. Miss Macy, the head fitter, had hurried off with it, promising to seek something to throw around her form a few minutes till it was ready.

Then a girl had appeared with a gorgeous pink opera cape. Such raiment was far beyond the slender means of the struggling artist, but for once she forgot to revel in its richness. She was looking anxiously at her watch. Three-quarters of an hour and then the Mesaba would clear her docks.

How fast the minutes flew by! Half an hour now!

She pounded on the door. Miss Macy bustled in. "I'm so sorry, Miss Fairweather, I've been delayed with some customers. You shall have your dress shortly."

"But I must have it at once!"

"Impossible!" And Miss Macy bustled off.

Lilian was now frantic.

She caught the next girl that passed.

"Give me a dress, any kind of a dress!"

A moment later she was tearing a price mark off a sloppy dress of a dirty chocolate color. She rushed into it, quite unmindful of the fact that it was two sizes too large, long waisted and bulging at the hips. Throwing the opera cape around her, she stuck on her blue hat and rushed madly from the store.

She hailed a passing cab. "Five dollars if you get me to pier 17 before the Mesaba sails!"

It seemed an eternity until she was rushing down the long wooden shed. Pushing aside the man who demanded her ticket, she ran up the gangplank, and her feet had scarcely left it when it was withdrawn. No Nicholas was in sight. She approached the steward and asked him where Mr. Purdy's stateroom was. He replied that no such party was booked.

Then Lilian gave a gasp. She ran to the end of the steamer nearest the dock only to find that the vessel had begun to move. She uttered a cry, which attracted the attention of a youngish man sitting on the piles at the corner of the pier hanging his heels over the water.

He jumped up and whistled, for he realized the full enormity of the situation. She was going, and he was to be left behind. The ocean would separate them, besides a sea of misunderstandings. His bluff had worked beyond his expectations.

He ran to the steamer's starting place and found a stout commercial looking man in a state of great excitement bargaining with the owner of a small tug to take him to the outgoing steamer. Nicholas joined forces with him. A common object—to catch the steamer—bound them together.

The thing was all arranged in a few minutes. They quickly got alongside and hailed the steamer.

There was already great excitement aboard the Mesaba. A woman in a dirty brown gown, a pink opera cloak and a blue hat was begging hysterically to be taken back to land.

The captain saw peace for him when he perceived the tug. The steamer stopped, and Lilian was transferred to meet her shameless lover and the justly indignant costumer. She began to upbraid the former when the commercial man interfered:

"Easy now, easy. What about my $250 wrap, not to mention the dress? I see you have damaged the cloak so we can't take it back. Now, how do I know you can pay for it?"

Poor Lilian! Two hundred and fifty dollars on demand! Her cheeks burned as she faltered, "I can't."

"Well, then, I will have you arrested for grand larceny!" cried the irate Mr. Schenck.

But Nicholas now interrupted angrily. "How do you dare, sir, to speak so to my wife?"

"Your wife? She is Miss Fairweather, and we have her name on our books."

"My wife. We were starting for Europe today, but were both detained, as you see."

Despair and rage and thankfulness mingled in poor Lilian's mind. But she acknowledged to herself that Nicholas had taken the only way out of the difficulty and caught at the proffered suggestion.

"Miss Macy took my dress to fix it and kept it until I knew I should miss the steamer." And she burst into tears.

"Now, sir, do you understand, and will you accept my check for $250? I will send it tomorrow. You know me, I think, Nicholas Purdy of the firm of Purdy & Bros."

"Yes, sir. I thank you, sir, and I beg the lady's pardon. I did not know she was Mrs. Purdy."

"Well, that's settled. Here are our two cabs. You go in one, my wife and I in the other."

With the look of a loving and obedient wife Lilian staggered into the cab. Once inside, her expression underwent an astonishing change. There were several moments of silence, while the storm gathered fury and broke.

"Scoundrel! Liar! To harrow my feelings for a week, to get me down like this and then to find it was all a bluff! I might have known you would not have spirit enough to do it!"

"I like you when you're mad. But if I were you, Lil, I wouldn't take on so in that thing. High tragedy and it don't agree. By the way, the cloak's mine. I might strip it from you and expose you to the public gaze in the other enormity."

"Oh, you are too bad! I suppose you think you have bought me with your $250!"

"I wish I could, were it a thousand times that amount—I mean your heart, my dear, and I know money can't buy that."

Silence for a few moments.

"You'll acknowledge, Lilian, the situation was awkward. Didn't I do the only thing I could do?"

"Oh, oh, oh, dear!" sobbing. "It's all been too much!"

"That's right, little girl; lean your head against me. That's where it ought to have been long ago, if only I had had the right sort of spunk."

"What do you call the exhibition you are giving me, then?"

"Well, little girl, I don't see what else I can do. When fair words for five years will not win a girl and yet a man finds that she does not care for him a little he is going to get her the way he can. You have shown me that the only way is to take possession as the savages do."

Ten minutes later the cab drew up in front of the boarding house where Miss Lilian Fairweather occupied a fourth floor back room.

"Goodby, savage," then to herself as she mounted the stairs: "It is not so bad to be taken possession of. I do like a masterful man!"

BASHFUL STANLEY.

His Response to a Speech of Eulogy at a Banquet.

William H. Rideing tells in McClure's Magazine of a dinner of the Papyrus club in Boston at which Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, was the guest of honor:

"Whether he (Stanley) sat or stood, he fidgeted and answered in monosyllables—not because he was unsociable or unappreciative, but because he—this man of iron, God's instrument, whose word in the field brooked no contradiction or evasion, he who defied obstacles and danger and pierced the heart of darkness—was bashful even in the company of fellow craftsmen.

"His embarrassment grew when after dinner the chairman eulogized him to the audience. He squirmed and averted his face as cheer after cheer confirmed the speaker's rhetorical ebullience of praise. 'Gentlemen, I introduce to you Mr. Stanley, who,' etc. The hero stood up slowly, painfully, reluctantly, and, with a gesture of deprecation, fumbled in first one and then another of his pockets without finding what he sought.

"It was supposed that he was looking for his notes, and more applause took the edge off the delay. His mouth twitched without speech for another awkward minute before, with a more erect bearing, he produced the object of his search and put it on his head. It was not paper, but a rag of a cap, and with that on he faced the company as one who by the act had done all that could be expected of him and made further acknowledgment of the honors he had received superfluous. It was a cap that Livingstone had worn and that Livingstone had given him."

Designed For a Profession.

It was impossible to shake James Martin's self esteem or satisfaction in any way. He had not been the Willowville shoemaker for twenty-eight years to acquire modesty. "I'm glad to hear your boy Willie's got a chance to teach in the college your money put him through," he said loftily to a summer resident as he sewed in the tongue of her shoe. "I always thought he'd be a good one for such a job."

"You did?" said the lady indifferently.

"I certainly did," and James Martin looked at her from his seat on the bench as from a pinnacle of wisdom. "I said to a number of folks after one or two conversations with him as to his prospects when he's just through high school—I said, 'Take a young feller like him that can't tell kid from pebble goat without you point out the difference, and best thing for him would be a so called profession,' I said, 'where he could make use of books, have 'em handy and not trust his own intellects, brain powers nor judgment except in extreme cases, sech as would seldom or never occur.'

"That's what I said then, and I say it now, ma'am."—Exchange.

An Intelligent Dog.

A gentleman once had a very handsome and intelligent collie in his possession. One day he lost the dog when taking it through the city. The creature in vain searched everywhere for his master and at last, seeing a hansom cab creeping leisurely along, jumped into it and settled himself determinedly on the seat. The driver tried to entice it out, but without success, and a little crowd collected. None

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO

What Booth's Kidney Pills are Doing for Peterboro People

All the blood in the body passes through the Kidneys every three minutes.

The Kidneys filter the blood.

They work night and day to daily remove about 500 grains of impure matter. If they fail some part of this impure matter is left in the blood bringing on pain in the back, headache, dissiness, irregular heart, hot dry skin, rheumatism, gravel, dropsy, deposits in the urine. Booth's Kidney Pills make the filtering right, and overcome Kidney trouble. Hundreds of Peterborough County residents have found this out.

Mrs. John Wallace, of 323 Water street, Peterborough, says: "I had suffered with many painful and annoying symptoms of Kidney trouble for over two years and could find nothing that would benefit my condition. My back was weak and a dull, heavy pain settled across the small of it, extending into my sides and shoulders. I could not sleep at night as the Kidney secretions were so frequent and irregular that I would have to leave my bed a number of times. I was dizzy and weak and would usually awake with a dull headache. Booth's Kidney Pills procured at Madill's drug store cured me when all else failed. I am stronger and feel better generally. I can conscientiously recommend Booth's Kidney Pills, and I would not be without a box in the house."

Cause of Thought.

"You look thoughtful tonight, Smith," remarked Brown as he stretched himself on two chairs.

"Yes," said Smith. "I have just got a note from the landlady."

"What does she say?"

"She says that I must pay my board at once or her daughter will sue me for breach of promise. I'm thinking what I'd better do."—London Tit-Bits.

"Drop In Any Time."

One of the pitfalls of friendship is the standing invitation. It is easy and pleasant to say: "Come whenever you like, my dear! We shall be delighted to see you at any time; don't stand on ceremony—come whenever you are this way." But let those who receive such invitations beware. It stands to reason that an unexpected visit cannot always be convenient—the hostess is in the midst of something or other and "not fit to be seen," or her husband has rushed home to take her out somewhere and she would rather go than stay at home and entertain her dearest friend, or the luncheon or the dinner is a makeshift—very nice, so far as the family is concerned, but not exactly suitable to set before visitors. The hostess tries to be nice, but can't help showing her vexation or embarrassment. The guest perceives something indefinable in the atmosphere and is accordingly constrained, and every one is uncomfortable. Yet people still go on giving and accepting standing invitations.—New York Tribune.

EXTENSION OF FRANCHISE GRANTED MACHINE TELEPHONE COMPANY AT LINDSAY

Lindsay, April 5.—On the strength of Mr. McKay, representative of the Canadian Machine Telephone Co., to the effect that the above company had every intention of completing and perfecting their system in Lindsay, of equipping a $7,000 office on William street, and would give the citizens of Lindsay competition in service, together with the fact that the councillors believe that the town of Lindsay has received better service from the Bell Telephone Co. since the Machine Co. entered the town, the town council agreed to grant an extension of the latter company's franchise for a period of six months. Consequently Ald. Kylie's motion re the default of the company to carry out their agreement re franchise was withdrawn.

Mr. McKay said that he felt sure the councillors were not antagonistic to the Machine Company, a company which had been doing good work on behalf of the independent telephone in the Dominion. Mr. McKay referred to the time when he waited on the town council re securing a franchise. Everything, he stated, then looked fine, but he was told the council at that time had come through. The town of Lindsay, he claimed, was getting a much better telephone system that they would have if the Machine Company had not secured the franchise. Mr. McKay stated that Lindsay was the only town of its size in the Dominion of Canada with a central energy system, which the town never would have had if it was not for the Machine Co.

The work of the Machine Company had been held up, but $7,000 was being expended in equipping the new office on William street, and the building had been leased for a period of ten years, which he thought was a good guarantee that the company meant business. The company was spending money every day in the town completing their system.

Mr. McKay went on to explain the service the city of Brantford was receiving from the Machine Company, and also from the Bell Company. The franchise in Brantford at first was slow, as it was in Lindsay, but today could not be beat. Competition had also made the Bell system much better, and Brantford was getting good service from both companies. The city of Brantford was connected with 2,300 farmers in the surrounding country by means of the rural telephone lines. The speaker claimed that the rural or farmers' telephone was never heard of until the independent phone system was organized. It was very valuable to have a town connected with the rural system, as it means increased business for the town. The Machine Company had installed a switchboard in East Toronto a year and a half ago, and it was to-day working to within thirty miles of Lindsay. Gradually and surely, he stated, they were giving the Bell Telephone a fight and were forcing them to give first-class service.

Dedication of Churches

To the Editor of the Review,

Sir.—In this land of churches it is well that we should understand the meaning of all this ceremony of dedicating of churches. Is there anything in it all? many are forced to ask. When a building is dedicated for a church it is set apart from secular or common to sacred use; it is the place for the solemn assembly

Montgomery sings of it in the following:—

Lord of Hosts, to Thee we raise
Here a house of prayer and praise.
Here to meet for praise and prayer.
Thou Thy people's hearts prepare

Also Doddridge writes:—

These walls we to Thy honor raise,
Long may they echo to thy praise,
And Thou, descending, fill the place
With choicest tokens of Thy grace.

What is church desecration? It is just the opposite of church consecration. It is to divert from sacred to secular or common use. Sacrilege is alienating to common or secular purposes what had been appropriated or set apart to religious uses. Now, my reader, don't you think that a "wayfaring man thou a fool" can see that when we use the sanctuary for the purpose of holding a secular concert where the common songs of the street are sung, that that is church desecration and sacrilege of the first degree?

Have any of our church supper artists or secular church concert promoters a word to say for themselves before the sentence of the court of public opinion is pronounced upon them?

Yours,
JNO. CARLISLE.

Give the Children good Bread and Butter

YOU may say bread is bread and all children want is plenty of it. In a way, that's true.

But it makes considerable difference whether the bread you give your children now counts just as a "filler" or whether it counts for future health. For there is a vital difference between breads made from different flours.

The most healthful as well as the cheapest food in the world is bread made from is made from the finest wheat in the world—Manitoba Red Fyfe—richest in high quality gluten, most in demand, and most valued in all the markets of the world.

Growing children thrive on bread made from "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" It gives them just the nourishment their systems need and in the most digestible and tempting form.

And it is natural food. It takes the place of meat at one quarter of the cost and is more quickly assimilated. It does not tax the stomach

Ogilvie's Royal Household Flour

This bread isn't merely something to fill a hungry stomach. It is a perfectly balanced food, rich in strength-giving, blood-making material.

It counts for long life.

It counts for a vigorous constitution.

It counts for bone and muscle making and good rich blood.

And this because "Royal Household" because the starch and gluten are properly balanced, which is very important. Ask your grocer for "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD".

Best and most economical for Bread, Pies, Cakes, Rolls, Muffins, Biscuit, and all family baking. Best for the children. Best for adults. Best for you.

PEOPLE AROUSED OVER JUDGE BECK'S ALLEGED STATEMENT

Edmonton, Alta., April 7.—A weekly paper here devotes several columns to an alleged attack on the Masonic society by Judge Beck, of the Supreme Court of Alberta. It declares that Judge Beck, who used to be a Mason, but who has recently become a Roman Catholic, declared in a public meeting that he would not believe a Mason on oath where another Mason was concerned. The case was referred to Minister of Justice Aylesworth, but he declined to take action, as the alleged statement was not made from the bench. A member of parliament from the west has declared his intention of calling the attention of the premier to the affair on the floor of the House of Commons. The story has created an immense sensation as one of Mr. Beck's colleagues on the Alberta bench is a prominent Mason.

C.P.R. AFTER PROPERTY ALONG RIVER

It is learned that the Canadian Pacific Railway is attempting to secure considerable property along the bank of the Otonabee river on the east side of Water street. A local real estate firm is handling the matter for the company and it is stated that offers have been made for the property of the late Wm. English, the Peterborough Canoe Company and several others.

The intentions of the company are not known, but it is presumed that they want the ground for a location for freight sheds.

JUNIOR BOYS AT Y.M.C.A. HAVE FINE BANQUET

The second annual banquet of the junior department of the Y.M.C.A. was held last evening in the games room of the boys' department, and it was the largest and most successful one that has ever been held in the department. Nearly 150 boys sat down and partook of the dainties furnished by the ladies. After the boys had disposed of the good things, a very interesting programme was given as follows:

Chairman—Dr. Middleton.
Toast—"The King."
Toast—"Boys' Department," Mr. H. Lees and Mr. B. W. Sharpe.
Reading—Mr. Johns.
Address—"Courage," Rev. J. G. Brown.
Presentation of Medals—Mr. J. H. Conmal.
Reading—Mr. Johns.
Toast—"The Ladies," Mr. Ray Scott. Mr. W. Armstrong.
Remarks—Mr. Shook, Mr. Ray Scott, Mr. Harold Hill.
Closing—"Blest Be the Tie That Binds."

The boys' friend, Dr. Middleton, acted as chairman of the evening. After the toast to the King, Mr. H. Lees proposed the toast to the boys' department. He dealt very ably with the history of the department, and traced its growth during the last four years—of which time he has been a member—up to the present time, showing how it had grown in influence and strength, after which Mr. B. W. Sharpe, the new boys' secretary, spoke a few words for his department, and outlined some of the things that will be held.

Mr. Johns more than delighted the boys with his humorous readings and sketches, and no doubt the boys will be glad to hear him again in the near future.

Rev. Mr. Brown was the speaker of the evening, and he gave an excellent address on "Courage." He pointed out how all boys admired courage in both men and boys, and finished by saying that Jesus Christ was the most courageous man that ever lived, and urged the boys to follow Him.

After the address Mr. Conmal presented the medals that the boys had won for indoor work, and he hoped that there would be twice as many next year to present.

The toast to the ladies was well handled by Mr. Ray Scott and Mr. W. Armstrong. Both spoke very highly of the ladies, and thanked them for the splendid banquet that they had prepared.

Mr. Shook, the president, congratulated the boys on the manner in which they had taken care of their rooms, and hoped that they would continue to do so.

Mr. Ray Scott and Mr. Harold Hill thanked Mr. Shook for his kind words.

The happy evening was brought to a close by all standing and joining hands and singing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds."

WEDDING BELLS

LAING—HASKELL

Montreal Star, April 7.—A very pretty wedding took place at the Church of St. John the Evangelist yesterday afternoon, when Louisa, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Haskell, was married to Mr. Arthur W. Laing, of the Bank of Ottawa, son of the late Mr. James M. Laing, of Trinidad, B.W.I. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a gown of white crepe de chine trimmed with silver and Duchess lace, and an old family veil, mounted with a coronet of orange blossoms. She was attended by Miss Marguerite Haskell, Miss Ruth Barr and Miss Irene Haskell, who were gowned alike in blue mousseline de soie, with presentation veils, and carried sheaf bouquets of pale pink flowers. Mr. B. Wainwright, of Peterborough, acted as best man and the ushers were Mr. Morley Holland and Mr. Ludlow Haskell. The Rev. Arthur French performed the ceremony, assisted by the bride's uncle, Rev. B. J. Moore, vicar of St. George's church, Toronto. Mr. and Mrs. Laing left by the evening train for the Adirondacks.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

IS DEAD IN EDMONTON

Mr. Archie Froude Passed Away Yesterday Morning After a Short Illness—Remains Will be Brought Here

Last evening Mr. James Froude, 409 Walter street, received a telegram from Edmonton announcing the death of his son, Archie Froude, which occurred in the hospital of that place yesterday morning after an illness of only four days. Sincere regret will be felt by the many friends and acquaintances in this city, and the sympathy of the community will go out to the bereaved parents and the members of the family. The late Mr. Froude, only a few weeks ago, visited here on his way from Welland, where he held the position as general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, to Edmonton, to accept the position of assistant general secretary in the Y.M.C.A. of that place. He received his preliminary education in this work at the local Y.M.C.A. and in 1908 was appointed physical director. He was an active and earnest worker in all branches of the work of the institution, and also in the Charlotte street Methodist church and Sunday school. To mourn his loss are two brothers, Harry, of Sidney, N.S., and Chester at home, and one sister, Miss Alma, and his parents. The remains will be brought to this city for interment in the Little Lake cemetery.

LIKELY TO GO TO PETAWAWA

Kingston, April 7.—The military camp at Barriefield next June will consist entirely of infantry. The artillery and cavalry which encamped here last June, will go to Petawawa for their training this year. In their place will be at Barriefield camp three more regiments of infantry, so that there will be as many men under canvas as before. The infantry will consist of the 6th, 7th and 8th Brigades. The 6th Brigade includes the 35th, 40th and 45th Regiments; the 7th Brigade, the 48th, 47th and 49th regiments, and the 8th Brigade, the 42nd, 56th and 59th Regiments. No 3 Cavalry Field Ambulance army medical corps, Kingston, will go to Petawawa, and No. 2 Field Ambulance of Ottawa will do duty at Barriefield camp.

Capt. H. T. Hughes, Victoria, B.C., Royal Canadian Engineers, has reported for duty here. There has not been any R.C.E. officer here for several years—since Lieut. Perrin was transferred—and this military district has been much in need of one.

As neither the 3rd Prince of Wales' Dragoons or 21th Battery are mentioned in the above despatch it seems reasonably sure that both will go to Petawawa. If the Dragoons go it will have been for the first time.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH VESTRY MEETING

The annual vestry meeting of St. Mark's church was held on Thursday evening, April 7th. Rev. Dr. Langfeldt was chairman and opened the proceedings with prayer.

After the minutes had been read the people's warden presented the financial report, which gave a substantial credit balance. The congregation contributed $2,240 for missions. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to the W.A., who very materially aided the finances of the church.

The election of the people's warden was proceeded with, resulting in the election of Mr. Chas. Greystock in the place of Mr. Fred. Collins, who resigned.

Dr. Langfeldt appointed Mr. Joshua Smithson his warden. Miss Maude Dixon, the efficient organist, received a hearty vote of thanks for her services and a tangible expression of appreciation in the voting to her a donation.

The lay delegates to the Synod were elected as follows: Messrs. Joshua Smithson, Dr. Hursham and H. Cumberland. The meeting then adjourned.

KNOCKED DOWN AT CROSSING

Mr. John Elliott, an elderly gentleman who resides at 112 McDonnel street, while walking across the crossing at the corner of Aylmer and Simcoe streets, Tuesday night, was knocked down by a horse attached to a buggy and driven by two young men. Several of the firemen at the station, noticing the accident, went to his assistance, and Mr. Elliott was able to walk to his home. He was bruised about the body, but is congratulating himself that his injuries were not more extensive.

Betting and Stock Exchange Gambling

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—What sort of people are the people of Canada anyhow, when a man who makes his money by gambling on the stock exchange can have the face to get up and lecture people about the immorals of betting on the races? The stock exchange is where the widows, orphans, wage-earners and workers and producers are robbed, and that's the only word that fits the crime.

CALLED HOME BY SISTER'S DEATH

Mr. H. A. McLaughlin, physical director of the Y.M.C.A., returned to his home this afternoon, having received a telegram announcing the death of his sister. Mr. McLaughlin will not return to this city. Since coming here last fall Mr. McLaughlin made many friends, who in regretting his departure, will extend to him their sincere sympathy in the bereavement he has been called upon to bear.

The Art of Overlooking.

Nobody can live long in the world and not admit that the words "nothing for nothing" contain a good amount of truth. He is of course a fool who does not count the cost so far as the future is concerned, but scarcely less a fool is he who does not overlook past costs. If we have any good or delightful thing in this life, at all hazards let us not taint our enjoyment by considering what we gave for it. Was it more than we could afford? Never mind. We have afforded it; we have made our purchase. Let us take off the ticket with the price and burn the receipt. There are items in life's ledger which must be overlooked unless we would spend all our days in balancing closed accounts.—London Spectator.

How She Rules Him.

"Skinphlint's wife certainly has remarkable success in managing him. I wonder how she does it."

"When he undertakes to deny her anything she really wants she threatens to sue him for divorce."

"Does he care so much for her, then?"

"Oh, no. It's not that, but he figures that it is cheaper to let her have her own way than it would be to either defend the suit or pay alimony."

A Bad Start.

"A man always looks foolish when he proposes," said the frank young woman.

"Yes," answered Mr. Meekton, "and I have evidently failed to overcome the absurd impression I made on Henletta on that occasion."

Social Paradox.

"It's impossible for me to dress on $3,000 a year."

"Well, my love, you must wear less."

"Don't be silly! You know perfectly well that the less I wear the more it costs."—Judge's Library.

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

IMMIGRANTS ARE MISUSED AT CANADIAN ENTRY PORTS

Major Beattie Tells of Abuses—Describes in House Incidents at Quebec—Hon. Frank Oliver Promises to Look Into it.

Ottawa, April 9.—Major Beattie of London brought to the attention of the Government yesterday afternoon the treatment of new-comers to this country by immigration officials.

The special instance was that of a gentleman, well-known in London, Ont., who had sent for his father, wife, son and daughter to come to Canada. In England, his father was a farmer in good circumstances, but he sold out his holdings in order to settle in Canada. On arrival at Quebec, he had $1,000 in his purse, and the remainder in bank drafts. The son traveled from London to Quebec to meet his family. They had arrived by the Empress of Britain, but he could not discover them. After some hours' search, however, he learned that they had been locked up like prisoners, in a bare room upstairs by immigration officials.

The officials refused to open the door to the son, but on being threatened with bodily violence by the London man, who stood 6 feet 4 inches, they at last opened it.

Major Beattie suggested that the arrivals had been unfortunate in showing their wealth. He did not want to think it was a hold-up, but cases like that had been known.

Hon. Frank Oliver said he was very sorry to hear of the occurrence. The statements would receive every attention.

Dr. Clark (Red Deer) also told the Minister that immigrants to this country were being treated with very scant courtesy. During the Easter holidays a farmer delegate had told him that on his return from the old land he felt compelled to protest to the immigration officials against their discourteous conduct.

The currency bill was considered in committee. Geo. H. Perley (Argenteuil) remarked that the British gold coin was called a "sovereign," and the American ten dollar coin an "eagle." He suggested that the Canadian gold coin be known as the "castor," or the "beaver." Mr. Fielding thought custom would decide this. The bill was passed.

In committee of supply, George H. Bradbury (Selkirk) directed the attention of the Minister of Finance to the recent petition of the wholesale fruit and vegetable dealers of Winnipeg, asking for an extension of free entry of early fruits and vegetables from the United States. He hoped the Minister would pay no attention to the petition. He doubted if it wold cheapen these commodities to the consumer to remit the duty. The only effect would be to enable the wholesale dealers to compel the local gardeners to accept local prices.

Martin Burrell (Yale-Cariboo), Maj. Currie (North Simcoe), and Richard Blain (Peel) also spoke in support of Mr. Bradbury's contention. The latter said that gardens and orchards in his district were growing stuff which a few years ago it was thought could not be grown in Canada.

Hon. W. S. Fielding replied that he had received a petition from the fruit growers of the Niagara district opposing the Winnipeg petition. Nothing would be done at this late period of the session to alter the tariff, but the matter would be considered in due course.

Postoffice estimates were taken up and J. E. Armstrong (East Lambton) put this question to Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux: "Does the hon. gentleman intend to increase the salaries of the railway mail clerks? And if not, why not?"

Mr. Lemieux replied that they had a substantial increase a few years ago. His intention, however, was to bring the outside service under the civil service act, and there would be an adjustment of salaries.

Miller Bill Expensive.

Ottawa, April 9.—The consideration of the Miller anti-racing bill was expensive for the country.

Introduced into the House on Nov. 11, it was given its second reading on Dec. 2, and referred to the special committee. Hearing of evidence began Jan. 18 and lasted until Feb. 18, the committee sitting 12 days and hearing fifty-six witnesses, whose fees will exceed $2,500. The printing of the evidence cost at least $1,000, even at the Government basis of a concern which does its own work; the translation of the report and evidence into French will cost at least $700; and, taking the value of the time of the House of Commons at $21 a minute, as has been estimated, it is easy to calculate a total exceeding $35,000.

This takes no note of the outside legal expenses, which will be $250 per day at any rate.

No More Time to Racing.

Ottawa, April 9.—"While we are somewhat disappointed at the result of the vote, still those in favor of the bill are not discouraged," said H. H. Miller yesterday. "While we lost in the first heat of the race, we are determined to win as many heats as are necessary to win a good cause.

"I might say this, further, that there was a most persistent lobby carried on, especially during the last two or three days, by solicitors in the employ of the opponents of the bill, particularly the Race Track Association. There are always to be found in the House of Commons, as in all other large bodies of men, a few who may be influenced by the lobbyist. This may have had something to do with our defeat."

Capt. Thomas Wallace asked the Government for an opportunity to take up his bill for the limitation of race meets.

"We have given a good deal of time to racing," said Sir Wilfrid Laurier. "I do not feel inclined to give any more."

SCORCHING INDICTMENT IS RENDERED AGAINST GRAFTERS

Grand Jury Investigating Council Graft Brings in a True Bill Charging Tax Collector Leslie With Bribery —Witnesses Have Not Told Whole Truth.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 9.—"We here desire to emphatically denounce as public malefactors not only the men who solicited the bribes, who held up the banks and the influential men of the City of Pittsburg, but who denounce for their part in our city's shame the bank president or the millionaire who attempts and who causes the downfall of the poor councilman who is paid no salary for the duties he is called upon to perform for the benefit of the public."

This is a section of a statement issued yesterday by the grand jury that has been probing into the council graft.

A true bill charging Max G. Leslie, collector of delinquent taxes in Allegheny County, with bribery, was returned by the jury, and at the same time a sweeping presentment was handed down, with general charges that many of the 125 witnesses which the jury has had before it during the graft investigations thus far, have wilfully withheld knowledge of graft secrets, and that a certain few have practically been guilty of perjury. Directors and officials of some of the six big banks which profited by the corrupt depository ordinance are severely scored by the probers.

The indictment of Leslie follows his recent acquittal on a charge of perjury in claiming an alibi in connection with a previous indictment for alleged bribery. He is now charged with receiving $25,000 from the Columbia National Bank of Pittsburg on June 3, 1908. In the former indictment the date was named as June 6, and Leslie proved that he was out of the city at the time.

It was declared most emphatically that former Councilman C. Stewart and Cashier James M. Young of the Second National Bank have concealed information from the grand jury inquisitors.

"We have," the jurors reported, "been unable to ascertain who paid Stewart this bribe money (meaning $52,000 charged as furnished by the Friend-Hoffstot pool of banks), in New York. Although Stewart met this man at least upon two or three occasions, although he knew his name and had several drinks with him, he nevertheless swears that he does not remember his name."

FIGHTING GOING ON

Turkish Troops and Clansmen at it Hammer and Tongs in Albania.

London, April 9.—The Standard's Constantinople correspondent reports renewed fighting between the Turkish troops and the clansmen who are threatening Pristina. The Turkish losses are reported to be 200 killed or wounded, forty men taken prisoners and two guns captured by the enemy. The losses of the Albanians are unknown.

The Daily Telegraph's Belgrade correspondent says that after fierce fighting the Albanians withdrew to the mountains, pursued by the Turks, who had two officers and 40 soldiers killed. The correspondent also sends the rumor that the Turkish commander, Shevket Pasha, was wounded.

A news agency despatch from Belgrade says: Only the restoration of Abdul Hamid, the deposed Sultan, to the throne of Turkey will satisfy the Albanian tribesmen who are now in evolt throughout almost the whole extent of that province. Yesterday's despatches say that the large rebel army near Prishtina, which was temporarily checked by the Government troops under Djavid Pasha, has been reinforced and is now engaged in another bloody battle with the loyalists.

The fighting is also continuing at Ipek and Djakova, in Northern Albania. The rebels hold both of these towns, but are being bombarded by the Government soldiers.

Estimates of the killed and wounded run into the hundreds, and from the fact that there are 15,000 rebels in the field and 20,000 soldiers, these estimates are believed to be conservative. Field hospitals have been established and are crowded with the wounded.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Edward McCarthy, aged 15, a G.T.R. call boy, lost a leg at Niagara Falls.

Charles Primrose, father of Geo. H. Primrose, the famous minstrel, is dead at Buffalo.

The steamer Wolverine, the largest on Lake Winnipeg, was burned at the Selkirk dock yesterday.

It is believed that a boy who killed a companion in a prize-fight in Passaic, N.J., has fled to Canada.

The enemies of the Payne tariff law at Washington are working to secure the appointment of a tariff commission.

Earl Crewe, presiding at a meeting of the Atlantic Union, indulged in some gentle banter concerning the Englishmen's stiffness of demeanor in the presence of strangers, whether British or foreign.

GALT THEATRE IS DESTROYED

Twenty-Five Thousand Dollars Damage Done in Opera House Block.

Galt, April 9.—Galt yesterday suffered from a $25,000 fire in the Opera House block, off Queen's square. It gutted the upper storey, completely destroying the playhouse, stage scenery and property.

The fire was supposedly caused by an electric light wire in the stage end, and was prevented from reaching a row of six stores on the ground floor, but these were badly damaged by water. Five firemen had a narrow escape when part of the floor fell in.

Losses: Opera House block, owned by Jas. Scott, value $30,000, insurance $10,000; tenants, Lockhardt & Co., plumbers, loss $1,500, insured; A. G. Bruce, paints and wall paper, loss $1,000, insured; H. Horton, butcher, loss $300, no insurance; F. A. McDonald, grocer, loss $1,000, insured; W. H. Hunter, sporting goods, loss $600; no insurance; J. Helm, upholsterer, loss $1,000, no insurance.

There was a play on Thursday night, but moving pictures have been the great feature of the house for a year, and it is not believed the opera house will be restored. The building blocks East Main street, and public feeling favors the acquirement of the property for removal and the extension of the street.

News yesterday from Herbert Panabaker, late of Hespeler, who moved to the west last fall, said that all his stock and implements at Riding Mountain, Man., were destroyed by fire, with no insurance.

WHITE SLAVE LEADERS ARE SENTENCED

New Haven, Conn., April 9.—In asking Judge George Wheeler in the Superior Court here yesterday to impose the maximum penalty upon Charles Ross and his wife for keeping a disorderly house, State Attorney Alling said that Ross and his wife were the leaders in the white slave traffic in this city and "that high city officials, members of the police department, bankers, and even churchmen are implicated in the white slave traffic which has been going on here for a long time, and the methods used to outwit the authorities are ahead of anything in New York."

Ross and wife were given the maximum penalty of five years in prison.

SHOT WIFE IN MISTAKE FOR BURGLAR

Harrisburg, Pa., April 9.—Mrs. Catharine Bomgardner, wife of a well-known plumber, was shot and killed by her husband in mistake for a burglar.

SHOT WIFE FOR GOING TO DANCE

Fort Frances, Ont., April 9.—But twelve months' married, a man named Burns shot his bride because she attended a dance against his expressed wishes. He is now in custody and she is dying.

During his absence she attended a dance, going to the home of a lady friend to spend the balance of the night. Burns returning and not finding his wife at home started out with a revolver and, on finding her, fired two shots, both taking effect in the head.

The victim is a daughter of a C.N.R. engineer named Good, of Rainy River.

RESIGNATION OF GOVERNMENT IS TALKED OF

London, April 9.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The master of Elibank, at Manchester, indicated that the Government will resign or dissolve when the Lords decide to reject or suspend the veto resolutions, which presumably will end in May.

A further issue of £4,000,000 three month treasury bills are announced to meet the national expenditure of the last six weeks. The Government has been borrowing at the rate of £4,000,000 weekly.

The Chronicle says there is a growing belief that the political crisis may end in a compromise, the latest theory being that the King may act as a pacificator.

Cobalt, Ont., April 9.—There are now six smallpox patients confined in the Isolation Hospital. Three of those cases have developed within the last couple of days. The others came to the hospital during the previous ten days. All the patients have been living in camp some time and just how they became infected is not known.

The Board of Health are starting the installation of a bucket system and have let the contract to a Toronto firm for a crematory. The work on the new sewerage and waterworks systems is being rushed to completion, though it will probably be at least three months before the system will be ready. In the meantime the scavenging system has been enlarged and improved.

BABY BORN ON TRAIN IN WEST

Moosejaw, Sask., April 9.—When No. 1 westbound train arrived yesterday a twenty-year-old girl and a new-born infant were removed in an ambulance.

The infant was born on the train between this point and Regina, but the girl concealed the fact until a porter's attention was drawn to noises from the toilet-room. They were the wailings of the ned-born babe, which was wrapped in a towel and placed in a cupboard.

The girl at first denied all knowledge. She was travelin gto Caley, Alta.

C.N.R. ROUTE TO NIAGARA FALLS

Niagara Falls, N.Y., April 9.—Belief that the Canadian Northern will begin constructing a line to the Falls was increased yesterday by the completion of a survey of a route to the city. It follows the right of way of the Toronto Niagara Power Co. to the city, crossing the river a short distance below the upper bridge. It is said the company has options for yards here, and likely cross on the proposed trans-Niagara bridge.

At the opera house last night members of the Junior Frontenacs were presented with gold watches for their O.H.A. victory. Jim Sutherland, the manager, was also remembered with a timepiece. W. F. Nickle, M.P.P., made the presentations.

The Metallurgy building at Queen's may not be built, as the estimates for the construction is far too high. The cost was to have been met by Prof. Nicol's gift of $40,000, but it will greatly exceed that.

The steamers Mapleton, Iroquois and Fairmount are ready to leave Thorold for the upper lakes, and the steamer Scaddington for Toronto April 15, when the Welland Canal will be open for navigation.

DETROIT STREET RAILWAY REFUSES

Detroit, April 9.—The Detroit United Railway yesterday refused the demands of its conductors and motormen to have their wages increased to 30 cents an hour and 45 cents for overtime from the present rate of 23, 25 and 27 cents.

Arbitration has been suggested as a means of avoiding a strike, and the men have appointed John McVicar of Detroit as their arbitrator. The men, however, insist that only the question of wages shall be arbitrated, while the company insists upon arbitration of the entire agreement between the company and the men, which includes a closed shop provision.

CONDUCTOR FOILS TRAIN ROBBERY

St. Paul, Minn., April 9.—Two masked bandits attempted early yesterday to hold up the "Pioneer Limited," which arrived here at 7.15 a.m.

The men passed through the front sleeper into the rear vestibule. When Conductor Shumway passed through the train, he was stopped by two masked men. Shumway leaped upon the larger of the bandits, but was overpowered. One man then reached down under the steps and cut the air hose and the train came to a stop. The men then jumped off.

CLOTHES TAKEN OFF PRISONERS

Richmond, Va., April 9.—Fred Cunningham, alias Eddie Fay, and Frank Chester, alias Little Dick Harris, arrested in New York, charged with having rifled the cashier's safe of the Richmond postoffice, were safely lodged in jail here at 8 a.m.

Sliter was a retired farmer, a justice of the peace, and coroner, and was elected many times to township and counties councils. Mr. Chapman, who was 70 years old, and a merchant and postmaster at North Augusta for 45 years. He, too, was an ex-township and counties councillor.

IMPROVEMENTS TO MONTREAL HARBOR

Montreal, April 9.—The harbor commissioners have disclosed their elaborate plans for further improvement of Montreal Harbor, which will involve $18,000,000, in addition to expenditure of $6,000,000, which is provided for already and is now being apportioned.

It is planned to dam the river between the end of the present guard pier and St. Helen's Island, and to bridge the south channel, making new bridge across the river for railways and other traffic.

A novel feature to do away with ice trouble in the spring is to build a series of forty islands in Laprairie Bay in horse-shoe shape. Provision is also made for the outlet into the river harbor of the proposed Georgian Bay Canal.

All these improvements will take some years to complete.

DYNAMITE CARTRIDGE ON CAR TRACK

Montreal, April 9.—Lying right on the Mount Royal avenue street railway track, two men found a dynamite cartridge strong enough to blow twenty-five street cars to pieces. The discovery was made just as an eastbound car was about to pass over.

The two quarrymen who picked it up, say it was a 50,000 dynamite cartridge, the explosion of which would be strong enough to displace 50,000 pounds of earth and gravel.

COL. ROOSEVELT AND THE MASONS

Paris, April 9.—Mr. Roosevelt's reception of Freemasons during his stay in Rome, has called forth criticism from a section of the royalist and Catholic press.

The Gaulois says that the incident justifies the precautions adopted by the Vatican.

The Eclair accuses Mr. Roosevelt of wreaking the vengeance of a disappointed tourist and punishing "an ungrateful papacy by the bowing down before the idol of Masonry."

In a special despatch from Vienna the claim is made that the Government there has adopted extraordinary precautions to prevent Mr. Roosevelt making "breaks" similar to those which he made in Rome.

THE MAN AT THE HEAD

Newspapers all over the country continue to discuss the Conservative leadership, and the most remarkable thing about it is that the whole press of Canada, Conservative, Liberal and Independent, unite in paying tribute to Mr. Borden as a MAN. Some of the editors think he is not successful as a leader. As a MAN they all sound his praises. Could anything be better for the Conservative party than this universal acknowledgement that the MAN at the head of it is worthy of public trust, that he is clean, honorable, upright, intellectual, broad-minded, farseeing, patriotic? "A statesman, but not a politician," is what the fault finders say.

What do the Canadian people think of it? Politicians grow on almost every bush, but a great statesman is not so easy to find.

SIR WILFRID'S WORK

The man who should be held responsible for the over-classification on the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, which is costing Canada so many millions of dollars, is Sir Wilfrid Laurier. At the last general election the appeal went up all over the country, "Let Sir Wilfrid finish his work," and the Premier explained that the work which he wished to finish, the work upon which he was willing to stake his future reputation, the work which would be his monument was the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. A monument is not always a gravestone, but it sometimes is, and the Grand Trunk Pacific may yet prove to be the gravestone of the Liberal party and its leader.

Why is it that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was so anxious to finish this work a few years ago is now so anxious to conceal from the people of Canada, just how the work is being done? If the work is creditable to him and to his party he ought to be pleased to allow everything connected with it to be known to the Canadian people, who pay for it. Why has he refused the Opposition demand for a full and fair enquiry into the over-classification charges?

THEY WERE NOT BRITISH

When one reads in the cable reports about the explosion on the British steamer Cairnrona and how the panic-stricken men fought against the women for the boats, it is very gratifying to know that, although it was a British boat, the men who acted so disgracefully were not British, but Russians. The British sailors fought for the women and succeeded in getting them into the boats first. There were nine hundred passengers, the cable dispatch says, mostly Russian emigrants bound for Portland. If the Portland referred to is the Maine terminus of the Grand Trunk Railway, it is to be feared that these cowardly Russians are immigrants for Canada. This is a big country, but there should be no room in it for such cowards. We can fill up Canada fast enough with immigrants from the United Kingdom, the United States, Scandinavia and other countries where men protect women.

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THIS?

In the discussion about railway projects has it ever occurred to anyone that the Ontario Government Railway, known as the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, might be extended southward to Peterborough? It has already been proposed that a railway should be constructed from Peterborough through Burleigh, Apsley, Wilberforce, Whitney and Mattawa, and then across to some point on the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway. Why should not such a line become part of the Government Railway? It is generally agreed that the Government railway must sometime be extended farther south, but it has always been supposed that it would aim for Toronto. Toronto and Western Ontario already have good connection with the Government railway, but the people of Eastern Ontario have to go far out of their way to Toronto in order to reach the great country to the north. During the next twenty years the development of Northern Ontario will be as marvellous as that of the Northwest. As yet almost nothing has been touched but the minerals. Valuable mineral discoveries are being made almost every day. But in the future the rich agricultural lands of the north will contribute more to the wealth of the province than the minerals. There is estimated to be as much good farm land north of the Height of Land as there is in Southern Ontario.

Now the people of Eastern Ontario should have their share in the profits that will accrue to the merchants and manufacturers of old Ontario from the settlement of that new land.

Look at the map of Ontario. Note what a network of railways there is in the western part of the province and how few railways there are in the central and eastern counties. Peterborough is within convenient reach of the eastern counties and not too far from the western counties. This is the point for which the Government railway should aim in coming south.

The Ontario Government is assisting the western counties to get cheap electric power from Niagara. What is it doing for Eastern Ontario? With better railway facilities and cheaper power the towns of Western Ontario will have an advantage over those of Eastern Ontario.

The extension of the Government railway from North Bay to Peterborough and from here to some lake port would put the central and eastern counties of Ontario in closer touch with Northern Ontario and the great Northwest. It would connect the Government railway with the Trent canal traffic as well as with the lake trade. It would be of immense advantage to Peterborough.

If the completion of Trent canal navigation and the extension of the Government railway to Peterborough could come simultaneously, this city would probably more than double its population in a few years.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has more than once boasted that he made Canada a nation, although Canada does not possess or exercise a single right of self-government that it did not exercise when Sir John Macdonald was premier. In fact we have now, lost our fiscal independence for our tariff is made at Washington.

A man near Guelph, crazed by liquor, killed his wife and then committed suicide. The Hamilton Spectator says: "If he had killed only his wife justice would have demanded that he should pay forfeit with his life at the end of a hangman's noose. Because he also took his own life justice will consider the incident as closed. But why? Surely there is a responsibility in this case lying back of the victims. Is it enough and sufficient that justice should be satisfied because two lives instead of one only have been snuffed out illegally? There is surely something lacking here?" What does the Spectator think should be done about it? Would it hang the man who sold the liquor?

The Grand Trunk Railway is arranging to build a railway to Providence, Rhode Island, and the people of that city state that they have been assured that it is intended to make it a port of shipment for traffic from the Grand Trunk Pacific. Grand Trunk Pacific officials have informed anxious Montrealers that it is not proposed to divert traffic from Montreal. It is certainly unlikely that they would carry traffic past Montreal to either Portland or Providence during the season of St. Lawrence navigation. But how about the winter ports of St. John and Halifax? Have they received assurances that the winter traffic will not go to American ports?

Restaurant Fails for Queer Reason.

New York, April 9.—Too much time between the order and the dinner, the result of too much distance between dining-room, brought about an assignment of the Cafe de l'Opera, yesterday, one of the show places on Broadway, with liabilities of $500,000. The restaurant was open last fall at a cost of $1,100,000, with a chef at $50,000 a year, and a manager at $100,000.

U. S. Naval Appropriation.

Washington, D.C., April 9.—By a decisive vote of 182 to 110, fourteen present and not voting, the House late yesterday authorized the construction of two battleships to cost $6,000,000 each.

This action was taken just previous to the vote of the naval bill carrying $128,037,002, three millions less than the naval bill requested.

Kitchener Not Coming.

Victoria, B.C., April 9.—A change of plans, necessitated by despatches awaiting his arrival in San Francisco yesterday, makes it impossible for Field Marshal Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, who is now California's guest, to visit any portion of Britain's American dominions during his present tour.

Senator T. O. Davis would lease western school lands rather than sell them.

Heart Palpitation Trembling Weakness

When Worn Thin With Worry and Poor Nerves, Health Miraculously Restored.

"Only those who have gone through months of nervousness with its fears, weakness, and almost helplessness, can realize the blessing of sound health." Thus opened the letter from Mrs. Helen Pierson, of Cape May: "I was all my life a very heavy coffee-drinker, and when my health began to fail, I made it stronger and stronger, because it braced me up. I didn't realize that this stimulation was wearing out my nerves. But at last a nervous breakdown occurred. Then I was able to see how foolish I had been—doing unnecessary things instead of resting. My heart fluttered dreadfully with the least exertion. I was bloodless, and more tired in the morning than when I went to bed. A friend whom Ferrozone had cured of anaemia recommended me to use Ferrozone, and from the first it did me good. As my blood grew stronger, the heart fluttering ceased, and this took from me the fear that I would suddenly die. I kept on gaining, and continued to use Ferrozone, two tablets with every meal. I am to-day sound, well, healthy, and happy—Ferrozone did it all."

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Belleriver, Que.—"Without Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I would not be alive. For five months I had painful and irregular periods and inflammation of the uterus. I suffered like a martyr and thought often of death. I consulted two doctors who could do nothing for me. I went to a hospital, and the best doctors said I must submit to an operation, because I had a tumor. I went back home much discouraged. One of my cousins advised me to take your Compound, as it had cured her. I did so and soon commenced to feel better, and my appetite came back with the first bottle. Now I feel no pain and am cured. Your remedy is deserving of praise."—Mrs. Emma Chatel, Valleyfield, Belleriver, Quebec.

Another Operation Avoided.

Adrian, Ga.—"I suffered untold misery from female troubles, and my doctor said an operation was my only chance, and I dreaded it almost as much as death. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me without an operation."—Lena V. Henry, R.F.D. 3.

Thirty years of unparalleled success confirms the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to cure female diseases.

CHAPTER XVII.

PAUL TRAFFORD stood at a window of that house which no changes have been able to dissociate from the memory of La Paiva. It was the middle of September, and he was thinking idly that the increased stir in the Champs Elysees showed already that the dispersed forces of Paris were beginning to concentrate again.

Paul Trafford was wondering what kind of a season was preparing for him. It was just a year ago, here in this very Travelers' club, that Wiltshire had broached the subject of his love for Paula. Trafford had entered on the winter which he had thought to make the happiest of his victorious career. And yet in those very months he had lost his wife and wrought some indefinable change between his daughter and himself.

Yes, there was a change. There could no longer be any doubt of that. But was it between them or in them? Trafford was not used to close analysis of character and admitted he did not know. She puzzled him. She seemed happy. She was often lively in her quiet way. She was tenderer and sweeter with him than she had ever been. She had borne the rupture with Winship so easily that he had been astonished. He could only think that the scene in June, with its brutal attack upon himself, her father, had killed what she had taken to be her love for the man. All that had passed off satisfactorily. And yet there was this subtle difference in her, this something which was just within range of his perception, though it was beyond his power to explain. In spite of her nearness she seemed mysteriously apart from him. It was as if there was in the atmosphere about her some spiritual element that put him ill at ease. He wondered if he were not growing to be afraid of her, as though she were no longer the daughter of his blood, but some ethereal visitant from other spheres.

"If her sister Jennie were to come back to me from the Lord's own keeping," he sometimes said to himself, "I don't suppose I should have a stranger feeling of unearthliness."

There seemed to Trafford but one means of bridging over the gulf that had opened between the girl and common life—that she should marry and have children. It was impossible, then, for his mind not to go back to Wiltshire. There was the man for her! It was a million pities that she had not felt so herself. He would have watched over her and worshiped her. She spoke of him often and always in a strain of tenderness. Then, too, she had never looked so favorably on any other man, with the exception of this young Winship, for whom, after all, apparently she had not cared.

"Lord, if it could only be brought about!" he said to himself now. "I believe I should be ready then to depart in peace."

He was turning away from the window to think of his lunch when he was suddenly arrested by an incident which seemed to him like an answer to prayer. Wiltshire himself was entering the club. There was nothing remarkable in the fact beyond what was passing in Trafford's mind. Wiltshire was a member of the Travelers', and it was natural that he should be in Paris at just that time of year. But Trafford could not see it so. Long ago he would have called it one of his lucky chances. Now he could only feel that Wiltshire had been "sent."

The two men shook hands with a sincere effusion which meant more than pleasure in each other's company. Each was an actor in the other's drama, and the interrupted play could begin again.

"This is luck," Wiltshire exclaimed. "I thought you were in America."

"I meant to go, but I didn't. I found that George could look after what was to be done just as well as I. He's there with Laura and their youngster. Paula and I are at Versailles. You must come out and see us."

"I should like to. In the meantime can't we have lunch together? Then we could talk a bit."

"All right, but not here. There'd be too many fellows interrupting us."

In Trafford's tone there was a hint of confidences to be exchanged to which the duke was not insensible.

"Let's go to Henry's," he suggested. "That's where they feed you best just now."

It was in the minute of going out to take a cab that each found leisure to note the changes that seven months had produced in his companion.

"By George, he's improved!" Trafford said to himself. "I believe Paula would see it. He's better looking, and he's smarter, and he's got an expression in his face that was never there before."

"I wonder what's aged him so?" Wiltshire was asking silently. "He's grown old in half a year. He looks like a man who's had some great shock. I suppose it must have been Mrs. Trafford's death."

The scraps of conversation after they had ordered lunch were as the tuning of the fiddles to the playing of the piece. Wiltshire talked of his trip to the Cape and gave his views on South Africa. He shifted to the Dolomites, where he had been in August, and passed on to tell of a few days' shooting he had just had in Hungary.

"Now I'm on my way home to slaughter birds at Edenbridge. I suppose Alice and I must have some people there."

"I expect you're very keen on it," Trafford hazarded.

"Not a bit. If there was anything better to do I shouldn't go. Let me give you one of these eggs a l'ecossaise. You'll find 'em good. The fact is, Trafford, I can't stay anywhere. I'm on the jump. Wherever I am I feel as if I should be more at peace somewhere else. When I went out to the Cape I thought that if I could only get away from Europe I should be all right, and yet, bless you, I hadn't been there a day before I was mad to be back again in England. But, Lord, England is the last place I can stay in. If ever I do take a week at one of my places over there, Alice passes a procession of virgins before me as if I were King Ahasuerus."

"Well, you'll marry one of them in time."

"No. That's done for. I'm one of those dull men with whom such things go hard. It's just a year ago, isn't it, since we first spoke of—of—something that never came off?"

"If you don't mind my saying so, Wiltshire, I always thought you gave up that fight rather easily."

"Do you mean"— Wiltshire began, with a jerk.

"No, I don't. I don't mean anything more than I say. All I know is that since you left Monte Carlo last February my little girl has been a different creature. There's something the matter with her still. I don't know what it is, but it's clear she isn't the same."

"Do you mean that she's unhappy?"

"I shouldn't go so far as that, and yet if I did I don't know that I should be very wrong. To me it seems as if she were living in another world. She goes and sits for hours in the park of the Petit Trianon—my little place touches it, you know—and when she comes back the look in her eyes is like that of some sweet soul strayed out of paradise. I don't know what to say to her or how to talk to her."

Trafford made fierce lunges at his slice of pre-sale and ate savagely. Wiltshire did not eat at all. He sat reflecting for a few minutes before he spoke.

"I've been under the impression," he said at last, "that there was something between her and young Winship, the painter."

"Oh, pshaw! There was nothing in that," Trafford declared, gulping nervously at his chablis. "What could there be?"

"Only what might not be unreasonable between a girl like Miss Trafford and a handsome, idealistic young chap."

"Oh, come now! The fellow's a scoundrel. I know all his ins and outs and of his people before him."

"I'm surprised to hear you say that. I've always thought rather highly of him. Alice has just got him a somewhat important commission. He's been over at Sandringham painting Queen Alexandra. She'd heard about his portrait of Miss Trafford and got Alice to send her a photograph of it. She seems to have been quite struck with it and sent Miss Trafford a message to that effect. She thought the likeness extraordinary, apart from the other merits of the work."

"Yes, I believe Lady Alice did write Paula something of the sort."

"We were rather pleased over the business, so that I'm sorry to hear your opinion of the young man."

"Oh, my opinion is of no importance! The only thing that counts is that, as far as I can see, Paula thinks of him as I do. I shouldn't pay any attention to the matter in one way or another if it were not for the purpose of assuring you"—

"Thanks!"

The word came out in that dry, laconic tone which hints that the rest of the subject can be best pursued in silence. It was dropped then and there with a significant abstention from further speech. It was only when they were shaking hands at the door to go their different ways that Trafford alluded to it again.

"I say, Wiltshire," he began, with a touch of embarrassment, "I hope you won't take anything I said about young Winship too seriously."

"Oh, no, I assure you."

"I called him a scoundrel. I had no right to do that. It's a word I'm too quick to use of any one whose ideas are different from mine. From the little intercourse I've had with the man I can't say that I like him, and yet I'm blowed if there isn't something in him I rather admire."

"Oh, I shan't think any more about it. Well, goodby, old chap. I'm ever so glad to have seen you."

"Goodby," Trafford returned as he got into his fiacre. "I'll tell Paula you're here, and I know she'll want you to come out and see us."

Wiltshire waited till Trafford was out of hearing before he turned round to the chasseur at the door of the restaurant.

"Find out for me," he said, "when there will be a train for Versailles and call me a cab."

An hour later Wiltshire stood before the little palace built for Jeanne du Barry, but stamped with the immortal charm of Marie Antoinette. It was so many years since he had been there that he had forgotten the simple elegance of its pale pilastered façade, against which four pomegranate trees made dark spots of verdure, with an occasional late scarlet flower. Cabmen hung about the gateway, children played in the court, and tourists waited at the door for their turn to enter. She would not be here, he said to himself, and passed onward to the park.

He avoided the road to the Hameau and the more frequented routes. If he found her at all, it would be in some secluded spot where the tourist would be little likely to venture. He wandered on, seeing no one but an occasional workman or a party of tourists.

"Never mind," he said to himself. "If I don't find her today, I shall come every day till I do."

He strayed aimlessly, knowing that any deliberate search would be useless and that only some happy chance would bring them together. There were many probabilities that in the semiobscurity of shaded allees and winding paths they would pass each other by. There were many more that she had not come at all. Still he would keep on, he said, until twilight told him that further staying would be fruitless. He would rather meet her in some such spot as this than in the commonplace atmosphere of a drawing room.

There was a moment when he found himself in a byway dim with the enchanting gloom of laurel, privet and box. The sunlight that filtered through the high trees above reached here only in faint flecks of gold on the somber foliage. The pathway climbed a little knoll and seemed to lead into some sacred grove.

It was with surprise that Wiltshire emerged suddenly into a sunny grass plot with a view of green meadows and a meandering stream. Close beside him on the brow of a little cliff perched a small pavilion, an epitome of that beauty, simple, stately and sure of itself, to which the eighteenth century worked up through all the splendor of color and all the graces of form. The autumn sunlight, bathing the cream colored walls, showed glimpses of the white and gold decoration within—the lyre, the harp, the flute and whatever else is suggestive of lightness, gladness and song. Wiltshire stood still. He was not an imaginative man, and yet he could almost persuade himself that he heard the tinkle of the spinet giving out some melody of Gluck's; he could almost fancy that he caught sight through the high windows of the queen's white Schu or Mme. Elizabeth's percale.

He was so lost in the memories of the spot that for a minute he nearly forgot the object of his quest. It was only when he began to look about him that he became aware of the presence of a girl in black. She stood in the center of an arched rustic bridge which, beyond the pavilion, spanned the tiny artificial chasm beneath. Behind her a towering mass of rocks formed a sort of grotto, from whence came the sound of falling water which had lured him on. Her hands rested on the rustic balustrade of the bridge, and she stood looking at him, as he at her.

For a minute it seemed as if there were some uncertainty in their mutual recognition. It was only when her lips quivered in a faint smile that Wiltshire had the courage to go forward.

"How strange!" she cried, turning to offer him her hand, but not moving from her place in the center of the bridge. "I was just thinking of you."

"And I of you," Wiltshire responded, keeping her hand an instant longer than he need have done. "There must surely have been some unseen force at work between us."

"Did you think I should be here?" she questioned in her direct way.

"I knew you lived somewhere near by," he replied evasively. "I was really strolling about at haphazard. It's the most wonderful thing in the world that I should have found you like this."

"Yes, it is," she agreed. "I come out into the park nearly every day, and I don't think I've ever met any one I knew before. Over at Versailles one does, but so few people ever come to the Trianons except to take a hurried run through the villas and a walk down to the Hameau. They don't know anything about the real beauties and associations of the place."

"I didn't myself till this afternoon."

"Oh, but you can't know anything yet."

"I could learn, though, if you'd teach me and take me about."

"I should love to," she smiled, "but you wouldn't have the time. I doubt, too, if you'd have the patience or the interest or the imagination."

"Of the four conditions I know I could take the time, and I could cultivate the others. All I should want would be a little steering."

She shook her head.

"I'm afraid you'd need more than that. I question whether you're one of the elect few who worship the shadows of other days. If you'll come home with me I'll give you a cup of tea, and perhaps you'll see papa. He's been in Paris all day, but he generally gets back about this time."

Wiltshire kept to himself the fact that he had seen papa already and hoped that, if they met, Trafford would do the same. It was just as well that Paula should think the meeting had come about through the special intervention of Providence. He turned when she did and followed her down through dim and narrow paths, where they could not walk abreast, toward the open avenue. He found answers to the many questions she asked about himself as she led the way: Where had he come from? Where was he going? How had he happened to drop down in the middle of the park of the Petit Trianon of all the odd places in the world? But as he spoke he had Trafford's words at luncheon ringing in his heart, "Some sweet soul strayed out of paradise." That was what she was. He could see exactly what her father had meant. The change in her was difficult to define, but it was very visible. It would be a vulgarizing of its spiritual quality to say that it had made her thinner and paler, but that was the effect. "Her eyes are homes of silent prayer" was the quotation he had been making to himself all the time she had been chattering about the king's aunts. It was clear that her self possession was but superficial and that even the cheerfulness of her conversation had a forced note.

"No happy woman could look like that," he said to himself when once the turn[illegible]

Doctors Condemn Oily Liniments

The Public are Warned to Be Careful of These Strong-Smelling Oily Liniments Containing Harmful Acids, Ammonia, Etc.

Many people have clung to the old-fashioned idea that a thick, greasy liniment is the best kind. Doctors say not—and they know.

Recently a number of these white, oily liniments were analysed, and they were found to contain an enormously high percentage of harmful acids, and such irritating chemicals as ammonia, etc. For the moment they may cause a warm sensation when first applied, but their continued use never cures rheumatism, and only deteriorates the skin, sets up inflammation and causes endless trouble.

When a doctor warns you to quit using a white, oily liniment—do so. He knows that a thick liniment can't penetrate, can't sink through the pores and reach the seat of the pain.

When asked his opinion a few days ago, Dr. Roberts stated that he considered a strong, penetrating, pain-subduing liniment such as "Nerviline," to be superior to any of the white, ammonia liniments. In his twenty-five years of practice he had witnessed cases of rheumatism, sciatica, and lumbago that simply would not respond to ordinary treatment—but Nerviline cured them. The same physician also spoke of the great advantages of keeping a preparation like Nerviline in the house always, because of cramps, diarrhoea, stomach disorders, earache, toothache, headache, and such minor ailments. Nerviline is a first-class cure. There is scarcely an ache or a pain, internal or external, that Nerviline won't cure. In thousands of homes no other pain-relieving medicine is used. Fifty years' continued success and the endorsement of the profession are proof that Nerviline is the liniment for the home.

TALK OF RESICINDING DOG BY-LAW BUT COMMITTEE TOOK NO ACTION ON IT

Measure not Likely to be Strictly Enforced—Effort Will be Made to Have Every Dog Owner Take out a License and Ownerless Canines Will Fare Badly

The recently passed dog by-law knows where it is at. Some of the aldermen are in the same position. Just where the dogs stand on the question is not known. The by-law is approved of by many citizens, principally by those who do not own dogs, but the owners are against it to a man, yes even to a woman. There was talk of rescinding the by-law at the meeting of the Legal committee last night, but it did not materialize. As the matter stands now, however, it looks as if the by-law will be allowed to stand, but it will not be rigidly enforced. If a dog has a tag on he will likely be allowed to run at large, but if he is found running about without a tag something will be likely to happen to him.

The aldermen cannot get together these days without the dog by-law coming up, and the Legal committee had not been long in session before it made its appearance like Banquo's ghost at the feast.

"What are we going to do about this by-law?" Ald. Duffus asked.

"Frankly speaking, I do not think it is any good as it is at present," said Ald. Phelan.

"Citizens are not going to buy the dog tags if they have to have leashes for the dogs," another alderman stated.

"But it is admitted that dogs running at large are a nuisance," said Ald. Turner, "and they should be stopped. I would like to see the by-law tested.

"It has been tested before," said Ald. Morgan, who was present.

"Let us test it again," said Ald. Turner.

The suggestion was made that the by-law should be rescinded.

"People will be saying that we don't know our own minds," said Ald. Batten.

"There are too many dogs that nobody owns," said Ald. Butler.

Ald. Morgan said he wasn't going to take his dogs forth on leashes, and it would be cruelty to animals to keep them shut up at home.

Some other phases of the dog question were discussed, and the consensus of opinion was that every person who owned a dog should be compelled to buy a tag, and that the ownerless canines should be exterminated. A dog catcher might be appointed if the latter class of dogs could not be rounded up by the policemen.

"Let the by-law stand," said the mayor, and we needn't enforce it if not advisable."

There was no further discussion on the matter.

57TH BAND HAVE ATTRACTIVE AND COMPLETE NEW QUARTERS

Band Hall is Splendidly Appointed in Every Way—Arrangements Convenient and Modern—A Brief Description of the New Home of the Band.

No more inviting or comfortable quarters could be desired than the new rooms of the 57th band, in the city hall buildings, Simcoe street. A Review representative paid a visit to the band hall yesterday afternoon and was surprised at the complete transformation effected in a short time, the quarters now being attractive, convenient and complete. In connection with the thorough re-furnishing and re-modelling, the very best of taste has been exercised, and the color blendings of the decorative work are rich and artistic.

The band's new home contains a rehearsal hall, a library, a uniform room, a billiard room and a bath-room and lavatory.

In the rehearsal hall there are forty-five lockers, finished in cherry. Accommodation is thus provided for each bandsman's uniform, and instrument. Pictures of the King and Queen adorn the walls, as well as those of famous battle scenes and other interesting subjects. There are two quarter-cut oak reading tables, on which are to be found an extensive list of the leading illustrated papers and popular magazines. There are fifty substantial chairs in the room and a roll-top desk for general writing purposes. The wall paper is a green pattern tapestry with border, and the wood work is dark green and white. Ferns and other plants add the finishing touch to the scheme of decoration.

The library is beautifully finished in light brown paper, and white and green wood work. The cabinet is of hardwood with cherry finish, and is divided into compartments. All these are classified, and contain the band's $2,500 library of music, on which, incidentally, the band is to be congratulated, as there are only three bands in the Dominion which have a library superior to that of the 57th.

The uniform room is finished in green and white, and contains hardwood wardrobes for the storing of the uniforms when they are not in use.

The billiard room is a popular place of recreation. It contains a first-class billiard table of the most approved type. The room is furnished with handsome easy chairs and appropriate pictures are hung on the walls. The paper is dark green pattern tapestry with border, and the wood work is finished in green and white. The floor is covered with Scotch inlaid linoleum, with dark red border.

The lavatory and bathroom have complete modern fixtures.

OBJECTION TO FIRE CHIEF AND ALDERMAN GOING TO THE CONVENTION

The annual convention of the International Fire Chiefs' Association will be held this year at Syracuse, August 22nd to 26th, and the Fire, Water and Light Committee last night decided to have Fire Chief Howard and Ald. Metheral attend the gathering. Last year it was held in Grand Rapids, Mich., and Chief Howard and Ald. Butler, who was then chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee attended, being given $50 each to cover their expenses.

When the matter came up last night Ald. Butler moved that Chief Howard and Ald. Morgan represent Peterborough at the convention and that they be given $50 each for expenses.

Ald. Morgan said he would be unable to get away and suggested that Ald. Metheral be sent.

"Then I'll move that Chief Howard and Ald. Metheral go," said Ald. Butler.

Ald. Batten seconded the motion and it was carried.

Ald. Graham objected. "We would not raise the pay of the firemen," he said, "and here we are going to spend a hundred dollars on an outing for the chief and an alderman."

Ald. Butler said there was a great deal to be learned at the convention and the money could not be spent to better advantage.

Ald. Metheral said he did not think he would be able to get away to attend the convention.

"It is a good while away; wait and see what happens," said Ald. Morgan.

"I don't think anybody will go," said Ald. Graham.

MAY ADOPT NEW SYSTEM OF LIGHTING PORTION OF TWO BUSINESS STREETS

There is a possibility that a new system may be adopted for lighting the business part of George street and Charlotte street from the Grand Trunk station to the Hotel National. It is proposed to string incandescent lights across the streets mentioned, the rows being close enough together to provide good illumination.

The question was up in the Fire, Water and Light Committee last year but nothing was done. It is believed that the change could be made at very little additional cost and the new system would be a fine advertisement for the city. It is learned that Guelph and Owen Sound have decided to adopt the system.

At the meeting of the committee last night Ald. Butler brought up the matter and after some discussion it was decided, on motion of Ald. Butler and Metheral, to have the chairman try and arrange with Mr. Larmonth of the Peterborough Light and Power Company to have two strings of lights put up at the corner of Charlotte and George streets as an experiment. If the strings of incandescent lights are put in the arc lamps will be removed.

TO LEAVE FOR TRIP ABROAD

Mr. and Mrs. D. Hughes-Charles Leave on Tuesday for Three Months Trip

This evening a number of prominent citizens will tender a farewell to Mr. D. Hughes-Charles, who, with Mrs. Hughes-Charles leaves on Tuesday for a three months' trip abroad. Mr. Hughes-Charles is universally regarded as one of those upright and shrewd men who make for the strength and upbuilding of any community. He is a man of great energy also and as manager of the local branch of the Bank of Commerce, as well as a member of various societies, he had done much more than his share to advance the interests of this city. Mr. Hughes-Charles comes from Ireland and of a very distinguished family. Sir Havelock Hughes-Charles, was a famous surgeon who accompanied the Prince and Princess of Wales during a tour in India. Mr. Hughes-Charles' family is well known in the south of Ireland in the hunting field and in college halls. During his absence the local branch will be in charge of Mr. Frank Cross.

WORK AMONG WHITE SLAVES

American Representative in City to Speak on Conditions and Reforms—Other Subjects

A movement of great importance will be instituted to-morrow in Peterborough, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., by a series of addresses to be given by the Rev. J. Aspinall McCuaig, of New York, university lecturer on eugenics and vice-president of the National Christian League for the Promotion of Social Purity. Mr. McCuaig will speak three times to-morrow: at 11 a.m. in Charlotte street Methodist church on "The Power of God"; at 7 p.m. in the St. Paul's Presbyterian church on "God's Great Problem, and at 4.15 p.m. to men only in the Grand opera house on "Man's Relationship to Woman."

Following the Sunday addresses two meetings will be held on Monday, one for women at 3 o'clock in St. Paul's church, when Mr. McCuaig will speak on "Woman's Responsibility," and a general meeting for men and women at 8 o'clock in St. Andrew's church on "The White Slave Traffic and Our Children."

The afternoons of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday will be devoted to a course of lectures on "Eugenics." These afternoon lectures will be for women only, and will deal with the training of children from infancy to adolescence.

On Tuesday evening Mr. McCuaig will lecture in the church on "Sex and Crime."

At a special meeting of the Ministerial alliance held last week at the Y.M.C.A., some of the startling facts involved in the general question of social evil were submitted, and the earnest co-operation of ministers and churches in the week's campaign indicated.

Mr. McCuaig has been the active centre in the social reform movement in progress in New York state during the past six months, in which the hearty co-operation of churches and universities, medical associations and labor federations has been a marked feature. The editorial comments of both the secular and religious press indicate the movement to be one of such popular character and of such political and moral significance that it is only a matter of time before it will draw into substantial co-operation the best citizenship of every community, till it becomes a political factor to a degree to which no reform issue has hereto approached.

AN EXPLANATION.

In explanation of the popular character of a work that bears upon many matters of such exceeding delicacy, Mr. McCuaig says: "The irresistible force of the movement is in the fact that the whole problem of social reform centres in the child, and that is irresistible to male and female, young and old, rich and poor alike. The child is the magnet that draws all hearts. The politics that make the child the centre will not only be popular, but will produce the conditions of highest safety and good for all."

In discussing the relations of man to woman, which is to be the subject of to-morrow afternoon's lecture, Mr. McCuaig asserts that the greatest problem of society is wrapped up in this relationship.

"The basis of this problem exists in the fundamental fact that man, the male, is incomplete in himself, and that woman, the female, is incomplete in herself; that man and woman are each part of a prospective whole; and that strong, impelling and attractive forces operate in each toward the consummation of a suitable union.

"The answer of spirit to spirit between man and woman is unquestionably less marked than that of mind to mind or sense to sense, which lack of balance between spiritual and physical susceptibility in a primal cause of perversion as safety demands that the constraint of the physical be counter-balanced at least by the control of the spiritual.

"An important phase of the problem as it relates to wedlock exists in the fact that effective oneness in marriage is possible only through the all-round adaptation of two complex unlike, but complementary beings. Thus, for example, if courage be a special characteristic of man and confidence the answering characteristic of woman, it can be conceived how the natural courage of the man may receive inspiration to any endurance or heroism from the warm, loving confidence of the woman, and also how the natural confidence of the woman may be welded into courage by the fearless aggression of the man; and so, two different but complementary characteristics become parts of one symmetrical whole. So, in marriage, each brings essentials and as specialists in varying essentials they stand together, equally one—not in of complementary essentiality. To realize this complement—spiritually, equality and likeness, but in equality mentally and physically—is the progression of marriage, and in this the man, by virtue of male characteristics, should exercise initiative and patience, not deeming that on account of his more independent, cosmopolitan life he can develop spirit from the woman, or that physical reciprocity alone can fulfil the high purpose of that union."

Of the duty of husbands to their wives, Mr. McCuaig leaves no room for doubt.

"So men ought to love their wives as their own bodies. And with all the greater things of love, it should be that that care which a man commonly exercises in the selection of tasty food and becoming clothing, in the avoidance of discomfort—draughts inclement weather and excess of heavy work—in the choice of chairs, cushions and positions of convenient light and warmth, and in the hundred little things of every-day that go to minister to personal comfort—that all of that care be exercised also in constant measure and with equal alertness in behalf of this wife."

"We don't like to prattle about our honesty," said a Semi-ready man, "but we let all our products speak the plain language to everybody." Every garment is guaranteed; every garment is marked in plain figures at its exact worth, and both wholesale and retail prices are exactly the same anywhere and everywhere in Canada.

These facts are factors in the introduction of a revolutionary idea in men's tailoring—Semi-ready clothes that are better than the best tailor's best.

Test us on a Dress Suit at $25 or $30, or on a Frock Coat—the most difficult, and the most particular garment in the sartorial craft. Frock Coats and Vests at $20 and $25.

NOTICE TO FAT WOMEN

Presumably you know, ladies, that the proper caper nowadays is lines. Curves are passe. You have got to take off your fat. This must be done in one of three ways. By dieting, by exercises or by means of Marmola Prescription Tablets. The two former will keep you busy for months and punish you pretty severely, the latter will cost you 75 cents at the druggist's. The tablets will not make any alterations in your diet necessary, and yet in all probability, before you have used up one case, you will be losing from 12 to 16 ounces of fat a day. Which method do you like the best?

If you fancy this pleasant method of getting off fat, see your druggist instantly, or else write the Marmola Co., 1103 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich., to send you a case by mail. These cases contain so generous a quantity of tablets that the treatment is very economical. It is, also, quite harmless, for the tablets are made exactly in accordance with the famous Marmola Prescription.

An Interesting Lecture

Rev. E. A. Pearson, B.A., will lecture on his Italian tour on Monday evening, April the 11th, in the auditorium of the Murray street Baptist church. The public will be cordially welcomed. Admission free.

THE SPASMODIC CONSUMER MUST PAY HIGHER PRICE

The milkmen of Peterborough like consistency on the part of their customers. They resent a customer discontinuing to take milk from them in the summer months and patronizing a neighbor's cow instead. A list of those who do so has been prepared by the Peterborough milkmen and the price of milk will be two cents cents higher than the price prevailing now.

To the Review this morning a dairyman stated that this was done on account of the fact that the patrons who bought milk from them the year round received it at a reasonable profit to the dairyman, while those who didn't buy from the dairies in the summer months when grass was the feed should be forced to pay more, as the winter feeding is expensive.

BUGGY STRUCK BY TRAIN AND OCCUPANTS THROWN OUT

There was only a few seconds between two Peterborough young men and death or serious injury yesterday afternoon. While crossing the C.P.R. track on Aylmer street in a buggy Ray Welsh and A. E. Brainseur were struck by the 438 express and were thrown from the carriage. The train, which was not travelling at full speed, caught the hind wheel of the buggy and tipped it over throwing the occupants violently to the ground. Welsh had an arm badly bruised but Brainseau escaped without injury. The buggy was damaged to some extent. The outfit belonged to Eddie Jones.

FAMILY WERE LOOKED AFTER

By Mr. G. N. Graham at the Orental--Were Strangers in the City

Last evening a woman with four small children, one a baby in arms, found herself in rather uncomfortable circumstances. Being a stranged to the city she had, on arriving here on the C.P.R. local from the west, taken a cab, which brought her and the children up street. Without means of securing a nigght's lodging, she went to several hotels, but was turned away. About nine o'clock Mr. G. N. Graham became acquainted with the facts of the case and took the strangers to his hotel, where they were cared for till this morning, when they were sent to Lakefield. The husband of the woman works in the vicinity of that place.

LECTURE WAS EXCEEDINGLY INTERESTING

The lecture given at St. John's church last evening by Rev. Dr. Llwyd, of Toronto on Jeanne d'Arc was largely attended and proved exceedingly interesting. After dealing with the life and works of the Maid of Orleans, Rev. Dr. Llwyd concluded his lecture by answering the question, "What does Jeanne d' Arc, living in the fifteenth century, mean to people in the twentieth?"

This century is the age of woman, and Jeanne d' Arc presents a superb example of unselfishness. Suggestions to every mother can be obtained from Jeanne d' Arc's life.

A vote of thanks to Dr. Llwyd was moved by Sheriff Hall and seconded by Mr. Mowat. The motion was unanimously carried.

The evening was closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

Cheap Power

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—We would like to know, should the City Council appoint a commissioner to secure new factories for the city, and should the commissioner be lucky enough to get a proposition from a concern which needed power as an inducement, what power have the city to offer, other than some at twenty dollars per horse power offered by the Light and Power Company.

Now, it would appear that we are in need of a very active policy in this regard, for many cities and towns in the west have lots of power to offer while we, the vaunted city of much cheap power, are without cheap power.

Now, I understand that the Kendry dam can be bought for from $100,000 to $125,000, with 900 horse power developed, and the same dam is capable of developing 600 horse power more. A rough estimate of these figures would make it appear that a good proposition to secure power is right in the city's hands. Nine hundred h.p. already developed, would give a return of $18,000 at $20 per h.p., or 18 per cent. on $100,000. Fifteen hundred h.p. at $20 per h.p. will give a return of $30,000, which, on an expenditure of $150,000, will give 20 per cent. Now, these figures look interesting, and if 8 1-2 per cent will pay interest and sinking fund, why is not a proposition of this kind good for the city, which is so much in need of power, and can get it already developed and within the city limits, and, I understand, as well as the power, 18 or 19 acres of land, suitable for factory locations, are included with this dam and power.

Surely our City Council is not going to let this good chance slip through their fingers. What think you?

TEMPTED, HE ATE.

Story of Heinrich Heine and a Toothsome Lyons Sausage.

Returning from a journey to the south of France, Heinrich Heine met a friend, a German chemist, in Lyons, who gave him a large sausage that had been made in Lyons with the request to deliver it to a mutual acquaintance, a homeopathic physician, in Paris. Heine promised to attend to the commission and intrusted the delicacy to the care of his wife, who was traveling with him. But as the postchaise was very slow and he soon became very hungry, on the advice of his wife both tasted of the sausage, which dwindled with every mile.

Arriving at Paris, Heine did not dare to send the remainder to the physician, and yet he wished to keep his promise. So he cut off the thinnest possible slice with his razor, wrapped it in a sheet of velinm paper and inclosed it in an envelope, with the following note:

Dear Doctor—From your scientific investigations we learn that the millionth part of a certain substance brings about the greatest results. I beg, therefore, your kind acceptance of the accompanying millionth part of a Lyons sausage, which our friend gave me to deliver to you. If homeopathy is a truth, then this little piece will have the same effect on you as the whole sausage. Your Old Time English Elections.

In old time England each constituency gave its representative in parliament a horse to carry him to Westminister and also paid his expenses on the road. These expenses, together with an allowance for each day spent on duty at the house of commons, generally at the rate of 80 cents a day, were refunded in one lump sum when the member returned home at the end of the parliamentary year. Sir F. Delaval totaled seven votes in an attempt on Andover in the general election of 1768. An item in his election agent's bill is typical of the reckoning he had to pay: "To being thrown out of the George inn, Andover, to my legs being thereby broken, to sugeon's bill and loss of time and business, all in the service of Sir F. Delaval, £500." Lord Llandaff won Dungarvan in 1868. The item "1547 whisky," caused him to protest faintly. "Begorra," said his election agent, "if ye want to squeeze a pippin like that ye'll never do for Dungarvan."

A Discovery of Vast Importance

It Is Now Admitted That Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Coughs, and Colds Can Only Be Quickly Cured By Mixing a New Medicine With the Air You Breathe.

Scientists acknowledge that medicated air treatment is the only treatment that will cure these diseases, and that stomach medicines are worse than useless.

Catarrhozone air treatment has been found to be the most effective way to cure all diseases of the throat, lungs, and nasal passages. Its action is so prompt that in less than an hour an ordinary cold is cured, and after a more thorough use of Catarrhozone, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and all diseases of the throat and lungs are completely cured.

Catarrhozone is a very simple and powerful method of treatment. You simply breathe it through the inhaler and it immediately passes over every air cell of the throat, lungs, and bronchial tubes, curing and healing as it goes.

Catarrhozone treatment affords little drops of healing for sore places in the lungs, throat, and nasal passages.

BASEBALL

Employed boys vs School.

The last of the series of three games between the working boys and the school boys came off last night in the Y gymnasium.

It was felt from the first the school boys would have very little chance, as two of their best men, Wallis and Matthews, were off, but when the boys got started it was seen it was not going to be a runaway. Both sides played very good ball although some of the boys were inclined to mix it up at times. The star for the school boys was without doubt Laing, and for the working boys, Flowers.

The score at half-time was nine for the school boys and fifteen for the working boys. Final score 33 to 29 in favor of the working boys.

Teams lined up as follows:

School Boys—Laing, Lees, Bartlett, Hill, Pearson.

Working Boys—Flowers, Nicholls, Hanwell, Hastie, Ostram.

THE PURSUIT OF SALLY

And the New Professor in the Woman's College.

By LOUISE OSBORN.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"They'll never think of looking for us here in the grove at this time." Sally Purdon looked anxiously over her shoulder with less confidence than her words implied.

"But what if they don't find us?" asked Julia breathlessly, trying to keep pace with her companion. "If we aren't able to get back to the village in time for the dinner that won't help us very much."

"We'll manage to get back all right," said Sally, looking critically through the trees at the fading light of the autumn sun. "It will be dark enough soon for us to make a dash out through the other end of the grove, through one of the farms, and from there we can get to the village from the upper end. The sophomores won't expect us in that direction."

"Quick!" Sally had suddenly changed the tone of her voice and was crouching with an arm around her companion behind a clump of laurel bushes. "They're in the grove," she whispered. "Lie flat and don't breathe!"

"Oh, dear!" whispered Julia as the sharp twigs scratched her face, but Sally's palm, clapped suddenly over her mouth, cut her complaints short.

The sound of hurried footsteps on the dead leaves and whispering voices came nearer. "They're in here somewhere," said one. "We must get Sally anyway." The footsteps suddenly ceased within a few feet of the crouching freshmen.

Sally, with one hand still held firmly over her companion's mouth, waited with every sense alert.

"They've circled us," whispered one, and the sound of the crumpling leaves announced at least a temporary relief for the freshman. When the sounds were lost in the distance Sally crawled carefully from the bushes, dragging her friend, limp and distracted, with her.

"I can't move a step," Julia begged. "I'm so dreadfully frightened."

"Fiddlesticks, Julia," said Sally, with scorn. "Why, if the girls had known you were such a baby they would never have elected you vice president."

"Oh, I wish they hadn't. It's dreadful. Do they steal just the officers?"

"Of course. Just me and you and the treasurer and the secretary," Sally explained. "You ought to be proud to be worth stealing. Let's make a dash for the farm now before they come back." Argument having failed, Sally tried to carry her friend by main force. "Quick!" she urged. "They're coming."

The returning footsteps only made the timid vice president more stolid. "I can't move!" she moaned.

Suddenly the figure of a sophomore sprang from behind the shadows of the trees. Julia started to scream.

"Silence!" commanded the sophomore in mock solemnity.

The plucky little freshman president let go her hold on her helpless friend, dodged the attempted grasp of a second sophomore who had appeared on the scene and ran with a sure foot and a steady pulse through the dark grove toward the farm and the open country beyond. She leaped skillfully over a fence, dashed down a country lane, crept under a hedge and found herself on the open highway that led to the village.

It was now about 6 o'clock, and she had half an hour to make her way through the ranks and traps of the vigilant sophomores to her expectant classmates awaiting her in gala attire at one of the village tea rooms. Freshmen presidents had evaded sophomores before and reached their class banquets, but they had been disguised as peddlers or smuggled in tied up in laundry bags or wrapped in burlaps and delivered from caterers' wagons hours before the banquet.

"I'll just have to trust to luck and my own muscle," thought Sally, with undaunted nerve, as she walked along the country road.

But when, as she rounded the last corner and turned into the village street, she heard the sound of quick footsteps behind the hedge at her side she felt a fatiguing sense of defeat.

"There she is," she heard some one call, and Sally made a sudden cut across the street and dashed through the campus gate into the protecting shadow of one of the college buildings. Safe for a moment, she crouched along the wall to the corner of the building. Then, with head bent forward, she made another quick turn and rushed headlong into—

With a quick sense of relief it came to her that sophomores didn't wear overcoats. It was only a professor.

"Excuse me," she said, trying to speak as if butting head first into professors was an everyday occurrence.

"Sally!" he said, and for a moment the plucky freshman president lost her pluck and forgot all about the pursuing sophomores and the expectant classmates.

"Stephen Dray," she gasped, "how could you?"

"How could I what? Didn't you know I was here?" The man stood before her in bewilderment.

"How could I? Why, I didn't even know that you knew I was here," she stammered, trying to make herself clear. "Oh, you are the most unreasonable man in the world. Did you come today?"

"Come today, Sally! Why, I'm a professor here. I thought I'd try to bury myself here with my books and forget"—

"Oh," said Sally in surprise, "and I came here to get my degree." She wrung her hands with impatience. "Stephen, you are so inconsiderate. You ought to have known that I'd want to come here to college. And I was having such a nice time, and now you're going to spoil it all. Why will you be so persistent?"

"You can jolly well change your mind about my persistence, Sally. Why"—he clutched his hands helplessly at his side—"why, Sally, I—I shan't even speak to you—only, of course, as an instructor."

"An instructor? Stephen, are you really an instructor?" Sally laughed a funny little laugh that made Stephen wince. "Well, I'm sure I beg your pardon, Mr. Instructor, for butting into you."

The sound of the exasperating sophomores urged Sally on. "Goodby, Stephen," she said, but Stephen detained her with an outstretched hand.

"Just once, Sally"— he began. "Do you want me to chuck the whole thing and get away?"

"Why, no; of course not!" she assured him, preoccupied with the sound of the approaching voices. She hurried past him and crouched down. Then, with a sudden determination, she whispered, "Stephen!"

He turned and came back.

"Help me, Stephen," Sally whispered, rising to her feet. "They're after me—the sophomores. You're not an instructor now; you're just Stephen. Please"—her hands clutched his arm convulsively—"please get me to the banquet, and I'll"—

Stephen, mindful of his own not far distant college days, caught the situation in a flash. "Get down!" he commanded. "Lie as flat as you can." Sally obeyed, and Stephen threw his ample overcoat over her. Then, bending down, he began to examine the bark of a tree a few feet away.

The sophomores, completely mystified by the sudden disappearance of their prey and not daring to make known the object of their quest to a professor, hurried by. "I thought he was the new English instructor," Stephen heard one of the sophomores exclaim, "but he seems to be doing botany experiments."

Two minutes later Stephen left the tree and came cautiously over to Sally. "I guess I can dash down to the 'co room now," suggested Sally from beneath the coat.

Stephen had other plans. "Here!" he ordered, lifting her up and tucking her hands into the sleeves of the overcoat. "Can you tie your hair down so that it will go into my hat?" And, while Sally worked with sure fingers pinning down her dishevelled hair, the instructor began unlacing his heavy boots.

"The coat is long enough to cover your dress, and the collar turned up will come to your ears, and the hat pulled down will cover your forehead. Sit down a second while I fasten these over your shoes. You can walk a little way with the two pairs, I fancy."

The shoes fastened and the hat drawn down, Sally jumped to her feet with a thrill of victory, and, without stopping to consider the plight of the bootless Stephen, hurried bravely on to the banquet and slouched past the exasperated sophomores like some weary tramp.

The next day curiosity was rife. "How on earth did Sally Purdon evade the sophomores?" asked the upper class men, and the freshmen, knowing the manner of her disguise, asked in vain for the name of the one who furnished her forth so generously. "It was a miracle," Sally told them, with a twinkle in her eye that only increased their curiosity.

Two days later Sally encountered Stephen in the campus.

"Stephen," she exclaimed, "it was the biggest freshman triumph in years." She laughed with enthusiasm and gratitude. "But I don't just know how to get your things back again. Perhaps I could drop them out of my window some night and"—

"Oh, never mind that," interrupted Stephen, disregarding the fact that he was wearing a borrowed hat and shivering for the want of a coat. "What I want to know is what you started to say you'd do if I saw you through."

"Oh!" gasped Sally in alarm. "Didn't you know? And maybe you wouldn't have done it if you had known."

"Sally Purdon," Stephen asked almost severely, "will you marry me or won't you?"

"Stephen Dray," said Sally, trying to imitate his tone, "I will."

How to Cook Meat.

The object of cooking meat is to make it tender and to keep in the juice and preserve the flavor. To do this sear the meat on both sides—that is, press it down quickly on a hot pan and then turn and sear the other side. When the meat turns a whitey brown color a coating has been formed which will keep in the juice. After searing the meat cook it slowly on a low fire. This will make it tender. Beef and mutton are the meats that are best for all persons.

Meats such as heart, liver, pork and kidney should never be given to young children or persons who are not well.

Pork should be used only in cold weather and not frequently even then.

Hot Dishes.

To make dinner plates and dishes hot before sending to the table dip them in very hot water instead of putting them in the oven. This takes only a little more time than putting them in the oven and is less liable to crack the china.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills Cured

"I think it should be the duty of the schools to teach children how to keep well," writes Miss Nannie E. Naydon, a well-known and highly esteemed resident of Bristol. "Ignorance of the laws of health and the use of improper remedies destroyed my vigor, and led me to the verge of invalidism. I was as a girl ruddy and strong. Nothing seemed to affect me until I was about thirty. Then gas began to form in the stomach. I suffered with bloating and a general failure in strength set in. If I went upstairs my breath hurt. My system was very irregular, and until I grew pretty bad I didn't pay much heed to my condition. Then I got blue, worried all the time, wakened in the night, and couldn't get to sleep again. None of the medicine I took helped me. One day I was reading of a very interesting case like mine cured by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I took the same treatment. It was just right—didn't physic me to death, but took hold of the weak, sick parts of my system, and set things right. It seems as if Dr. Hamilton's Pills have made me young again, and all my color, spirits, vigor, and health of former days have returned to stay."

Every girl and woman should use Dr. Hamilton's Pills regularly. They help a woman in many ways. Beware of the dealer who asks you to take an inferior pill on which his profit is larger than on Dr. Hamilton's. Sold in yellow boxes; 25c per box, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

PETERBOROUGH BOY IN WEST COMPOSES A PARODY

After Having Passed Through an Experience such as Awaits the Settler in the Western Country

Every person does not have the happy faculty of being able to appreciate a joke, even when oneself is the victim to suffer, or to look trouble in the eye and smile. Apparently the writer of the epistle and composer of the parody given below, is one of those who can, and his many friends in this city will be pleased to hear that, after surmounting innumerable difficulties he is now the proud possessor of a comfortable home, surrounded by a large and fertile portion of Western Canada's "best." He is Mr. Eddie Trollope, one of Peterborough's young representatives in the western country, and in writing to a friend in this city from Pakehassett, Alberta, he adds the following:—

Three fellows take a trip north of Edmonton, Alberta, in search of homesteads, but not very favorably impressed, though they spend a very enjoyable time during the summer of 1908.

A little explanation is necessary in connection with this parody on "The Old Apple Tree," which was composed by one one evening while sitting before the camp fire, about one hundred and fifty miles north of Edmonton. A couple of fellows and myself were in that part of the country looking for homesteads, and, being disgusted with the appearance of the country, the roads, or rather the trails, and the trip in general, we were on our way back to Edmonton, after having been stalled in a muskeg, in which both horses got down and were unable to get up. After unharnessing the horses as they lay buried to their bodies in the mess, and unloading the wagon, we succeeded in pulling the wagon to firm ground, and then carried the load to the shelter of a large tamarac tree and covered what articles we did not actually need with our wagon cover, until such time as we could return for them. However, we had to make two more trips back to bring to Edmonton what we took out in one load, as the weather was rainy, and the trail becoming worse all the while. We are all alive yet, and enjoyed the trip immensely:

We really came a long way from the city,
In search of land, on which to build a shack,
But that we came at all it is a pity,
For now the only thing is to turn back.
But why we do, of course there is a reason,
The roads, they are so terribly rough.
And just now at this particular season,
I tell you, lads, we certainly got enough.

In the shade of an old tamarac tree,
There a part of our load you could see.
When we struck a muskeg, where the horse lost a leg,
When he tried to get the other one free.
It was there we unloaded our jag,
In the middle of a great big muskeg,
We took all we could, left the rest in the mud,
In the shade of an old tamarac tree,

Once again we hit the trail to get our outfit,
Resolved that when we hit home we will stay,
But this time we all rather enjoyed it,
We do not have the hardships on the way.
But, like most things, one's mind is apt to change,
So we all found a claim we liked at last,
And now all three are settled on the range,
Enjoying life, and thinking of the past.

In the shade of an old tamarac tree,
Oftentimes one of us you can see,
In a big rustic seat, which for ease can't be beat,
With a pipe and a book on his knee,
Blowing clouds of smoke up in the air,
In which pretty faces appear,
For this is the way we spend many a day,
In the shade of an old tamarac tree,

CONEY ISLAND.

The Millions It Takes In Mostly In Nickels and Dimes.

During the season last summer seven to eight million people made 20,000,000 trips to Coney Island. They spent there $45,000,000, mostly in nickels and dimes, and the total sum was three times what this nation paid to Napoleon for Louisiana or six times what we paid Russia for Alaska.

There are in Coney Island peanut stands the size of a broad top desk which rent for $1,500 a season. The men who sell frankfurters pay enormous sums for the right to stand where they do and get their money back in the nickels of the twenty millions.

On week days the attendance is large, but on Sundays and holidays it rises to a point where each visitor has room only to be happy standing still. On the Fourth of July 600,000 people crowded into the little island, bathed, shot the chutes, were photographed and ate "redhots." It was believed then that Coney would not hold a single additional visitor, but on Aug. 15 a new hundred thousand came, making half a million in one day.

It is a wonderful business, this Coney Island, but a very risky one. The 900,000,000 nickels depend upon the weather. When the mercury drops, profits fall to nothing. If a plague should break out and the island be quarantined, boats would stop running and the people would stay in their city homes. The Coney Island farmer must harvest his crop of nickels while the sun shines.—Success Magazine.

Mr. Hewlett and America.

Maurice Hewlett has never been in America. "I have never been and I do not know that I shall ever go," is the way Mr. Hewlett puts it recently. "It seems to me that it would be a terribly upsetting journey, and I hate to be upset. I know that I should loathe New York just as I loathe London, which I hate so much that I always write there, because there is nothing pleasant to distract me." When Mr. Hewlett is writing he lives in the exclusive Northwick terrace, hard by St. John's wood, in a house of white stucco, brass trimmed and bordered with flowers. He has, however, a favorite country place near Salisbury, where, as he puts it, "the life is so adorable that I have not strength of mind sufficient to give it up and tie myself to my desk." The dislike of travel may be at the root of Mr. Hewlett's disinclination to come to America, or something else may be. "You raging Americans," he said to a companion recently—"you raging Americans do not conceal your feelings well. There is no reason why you should."—Argonaut.

A MIRACLE IN MANITOBA

CAPTAIN BANISTER STRICKEN WHILE IN CAMP

HAD TO BE CARRIED TO TRAIN. HELPLESS IN BED FOR SIX WEEKS

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" COMPLETELY CURED HIM AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Captain Banister's letter reads like a page from the History of Miracles. It is one of the strongest endorsements ever given to any medicine in the world.

Captain Nelson Banister of Oak Lake is known from one end of Manitoba to the other—in fact, throughout Western Canada. Naturally, the letter of such a prominent citizen and officer is bound to carry convincing weight with all thinking people.

OAK LAKE, MAN., June 15th, 1909.

"Fully appreciating the great benefits that I have derived from using your wonderful remedy, I feel it is my duty to write you a little history of my case and ask you to publish it, for the good of some others that may be today suffering from the complaint that I am happy to say, "Fruit-a-tives" completely cured me of.

About two years ago, while in Camp at Brandon with "A" squadron, 12th, Manitoba Dragoons, I was stricken with Sciatica and Neuralgia of the muscles of the heart. I was so bad that I had to be carried to the train and sent home, and after being again carried from the train to my bed on arrival at Oak Lake, I was forced to stay there six weeks. Doctoring and nursing in time enabled me to get on my feet, but I could do no work, and was almost as helpless as when confined to bed. A sample of "Fruit-a-tives" came to our house about that time and I tried them. Believe me—that from the first dose I experienced great relief and continued taking them until I was as well and strong as ever. This satisfactory change and restoration to health, I attribute wholly to "Fruit-a-tives", and I never miss a chance to recommend them to my friends and neighbors.

Previous to taking "Fruit-a-tives", my heart was examined by doctors and found to be so weak that it was considered unsafe for me to take chloroform, or any anaesthetic, but since taking "Fruit-a-tives", the heart has become so strong that I was able to have a minor operation on one of my hands and took chloroform without any ill effects. Today the whole family uses "Fruit-a-tives", we purchase them from Mr. Graham, our local druggist, keep them in the house all the time, and just simply could not get along without them. They are the best medicine in the world."

NELSON BANISTER, (Capt. "A" Squadron, 12th Manitoba Dragoons.)

Truly, the days of the miracle have not passed way. When these small fruit tablets can do what physicians, with all their skill, cannot do, it does seem almost miraculous. Yet nothing is more logical and scientific than the medicinal action of "Fruit-a-tives".

Sciatica, Rheumatism and Neuralgia in any form are caused by poisoned blood.

It is the duty of the Bowels, Kidneys and Skin to rid the system of waste matter, or urea. If any of these organs are weak, the waste matter stays in the system and is converted into uric acid.

It is uric acid which poisons the blood and inflames the delicate nerves, membranes and muscles, causing what is known as Rheumatism, Sciatica or Neuralgia.

"Fruit-a-tives" promptly cures these troubles because "Fruit-a-tives" cures the Bowels, Kidneys and Skin. "Fruit-a-tives" makes these three great eliminating organs well and strong. And when the waste of the body is regularly disposed of, there can be no excess of uric acid.

"Fruit-a-tives", as Captain Banister says, "is the best medicine in the world." It is made of fruit juices and valuable nerve and heart tonics, and is pleasant to take.

50c a box—6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. At dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

LIKELY TO CHANGE FROM GRAVITY TO STORAGE SYSTEM FOR FIRE ALARM TELEGRAPH

Agreement Can Be Made With Bell Telephone Company Whereby City Will Save $350 per Year—Chief Howard Has Been Conducting Negotiations and it Looks as if a Good Bargain Can be Made—Other Matters Before Committee.

It is likely that the Peterborough fire alarm telegraph system will be changed from the gravity battery to the storage battery system, the latter being supplied by the Bell Telephone Company. It costs $500 per year to operate the present system, whereas the cost of the storage system will only be $150 per year, effecting a saving to the city of $350 per year.

The matter was dealt with at the meeting of the Fire, Water and Light committee last night, when Chief Howard explained the proposed change. It appears that at the local plant of the Bell Telephone Company there is a surplus of storage batteries and power, and an agreement can be made with them to operate the fire alarm telegraph system for $150 per year. The chief has been negotiating with the officers of the company at Montreal, Toronto and Peterborough, and correspondence relating to the question was read, in which the company made the proposition outlined above. The chief stated that the storage battery system is now past the experimental stage, and was giving good satisfaction in St. Thomas, Stratford and other places. The gravity system was considered the best when it was installed in Peterborough, but the storage system is now considered equally as good.

The members of the committee thought well of the proposed change, and it was decided, on motion of Ald. Buller and Batten, to have the chief and city solicitor take up the matter, the latter to draw up an agreement. It is proposed to try the new system for one year, with an option of ten if it is satisfactory. The present plant will be kept at the fire hall, to be used in case the new system is not satisfactory. The change from the gravity to the storage system will be made without cost to the city.

On motion of Ald. Buller and Ald. Metheral, it was decided to ask for tenders for suits for the firemen, to be delivered September 1st.

The chief suggested that the city subscribe to the three local newspapers and one Toronto paper, and two or three technical magazines for the fire hall, but the committee did not favor the idea. They thought the firemen could buy their own reading matter.

On motion of Ald. Batten and Ald. Metheral, it was decided to subscribe to Fire and Water Engineering Journal for the firemen. This is a magazine devoted principally to fire fighting.

The question of constructing a box stall at the fire station was left with a committee composed of Ald. Graham, Metheral and the chairman.

Changes in street lights and requests for hydrants were discussed, and will be gone into when the committee make a tour of the city in the near future.

No action was taken on the request of the Water Commissioners for a new electric gang at the power house. The city will instal the gang if the commissioners will purchase it. The commissioners, it was stated, had offered to do this some time ago, but had changed their minds.

Those present were: Ald. Morgan, chairman; Mayor Morrow, Aldermen Metheral, Buller, Graham and Batten.

NEW STRENGTH IN THE SPRING

Nature Needs Aid in Making New Health-Giving Blood

In the spring the system needs toning up. In the spring to be healthy and strong you must have new blood, just as the trees must have new sap. Nature demands it and without this new blood you will feel weak and languid. You may have twinges of rheumatism or the sharp stabbing pains of neuralgia. Often there are disfiguring pimples or eruptions on the skin. In other cases there is merely a feeling of tiredness and a variable appetite. Any of these are signs that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has told upon you. What is needed to put you right is a tonic, and in all the world there is no tonic can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills actually make new, rich, red blood—your greatest need in spring. This new blood drives out disease, clears the skin and makes weak, easily tired men and women and children bright, active and strong. Miss A. M. Dugay, Lower Cove, N.S., says: "I believe I owe my life to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My blood seemed to have turned to water. I was pale as a sheet; I suffered from headaches, and floating specs seemed to be constantly before my eyes. As the trouble progressed my limbs began to swell, and it was feared that dropsy had set in and that my case was hopeless. Up to this time two doctors had attended me, but notwithstanding I kept growing worse. It was at this juncture I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after taking a few boxes I was much improved. I kept on using the Pills until I had taken eight boxes, when my health was completely restored."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. IS LEAVING FOR WINNIPEG

Mr. Bert Turnbull Has Accepted Good Position in Western City

Mr. J. A. (Bert) Turnbull, who has been connected with the city ticket office of the C.P.R. for the past five years leaves this evening for his home at Galt and from there will proceed to Winnipeg, where a position in a steamship office awaits him. The departure of Mr. Turnbull is much regretted as he has made many friends in the city. Last night he was remembered by the members of the Belmont Club, of which he was a member. He was presented with a silver napkin ring engraved with the club's arms and the name of the recipient. Mr. J. T. C. Lang bespoke the regret of the club at Mr. Turnbull's departure and Mr. Melville Jamieson made the presentation and also added a few words in which he wished Mr. Turnbull every success. The latter made an appropriate reply.

WINDMILLS ARE THE SENTINELS

Of the Garden Space South of the Custom House Building

A number of small windmills in the plot south of the Customs House whirling merrily in the April breeze, have attracted considerable attention and aroused much curiosity. Anything that arouses a curiosity always appeals to a reporter so a Review man asked Mr. "Daddy" Taylor, the caretaker of the Custom House, what purpose the little wind spun wheels served.

In answer Mr. Taylor stated that he had planted some garden peas in the plot which he uses as his private garden space, and the windmills were effective in keeping away the sparrows, which have a strong weakness for green pea diet.

AFTER SERMON ON MARTYRDOM MISSIONER IS SHOT DOWN

Prominent Editor and Mission-Worker Among Foreigners in Pittsburg is Slain and Colleague is Seriously Wounded by Insane Man.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 11.—A sermon on "Martyrdom," in which Frank Skala, an editor and prominent mission worker, had declared himself willing to lay down his life for the Christian cause, was followed yesterday by his assassination, and the shooting down also of a fellow church leader, John Gay, who may die.

Arm in arm, the two missionaries were leaving the little Congregational Church in Wood's Run, a suburb, at the head of more than a hundred foreigners. A raggedly dressed and collarless man poked his way through the crowd, and, when he was but a step behind the leaders, he pressed a revolver to Skala's head and fired twice. The bullets took effect in the jaw and temple.

Gay, who threw up his right hand to ward off the weapon, was hit first on the thumb and then a second bullet was buried in his head. He fell unconscious across the lifeless body of his colleague.

For a moment the assassin stood over his victims, flourishing his revolver, while the panic-stricken crowd fled to shelter behind posts and doorways. Then stamping his foot on the bodies, the murderer made off down the avenue to the railroad tracks and was soon lost to view. A large armed posse of police, detectives and church people, was soon in pursuit, but late last night had found no trace of him.

The slayer was Jim Radovitch, a character known to most of the mission for his radical opinions. A moment before he had meekly read from juvenile leaflets in the Sunday school led by Skala; previously he had sat in a back pew of the church during the regular serman; and at the beginning of the services Skala had shaken his hand.

It is believed by some of the congregation that the sermon Skala preached with the emphatic declaration that "any moment God would want my life I am ready to lay my life down," stirred the probably insane man to test his Christian fidelity.

Skala was prominently locally as a mission worker; and associate editor of The Bohemian-Christian Journal. He was a Presbyterian, but had filled the pulpit at the Congregational Mission House as a substitute yesterday, as he had often done before. He came here from Moravia, Austria, seven years ago and after a thorough education at Park College in Missouri, settled at Coroapolis to work among the foreigners. He was 25 years old. He married one of his converts to Protestanism and besides her, he leaves a child.

TIBET'S NEW RULER VISITING A MONASTERY
FROM THE SPHERE

The Pontiff of Tashilumpo, says Lieutenant Colonel Waddell, in his "Lhasa and Its Mysteries," is known to Europeans as the "Tashi" (vulgarly "Teshu") Lama, after his place of residence. He devotes himself more absorbingly to spiritual matters than his brother Grand Lama at Lhasa. In consequence of this he has a superior reputation for piety, and learning so that he is given the title of "Great Gem of Learning" (Pan-chen-Rimpoche.)

FRENCH PREMIER MEETS WITH A HOSTILE DEMONSTRATION

Revolutionary Groups Hoot, Smash Windows and Fire Off Revolvers at St. Chamond at Opening of Electoral Campaign.

Saint Chamond, France, April 11.—The opening of the electoral campaign here yesterday by Premier Briand was marked by violent counter demonstrations by anarchist and revolutionary groups, who interrupted the Premier's speech to his constituents by smashing windows and shooting off revolvers.

Premier Briand's address pleaded for moderation and peace, urging the attainment of social reforms by pacific and gradual methods.

"The republic," he said, "owes to all equal justice and liberty. She cannot make herself a persecutor without failing in essential principles."

At this point the Premier's words were drowned by the crash of a shower of bricks through the windows and the cracking of revolvers. The speaker continued, however, and detailed the work of social reform which had been accompanied by the outgoing Parliament. He outlined the Government's program, in which electoral reform occupied a prominent place.

Representation must be more homogeneous, he said. The prominence of petty local interests had nullified the financial efforts of the nation.

Other measures, he added, to which attention will be given, includes the proper definition of the status of state employes, in order to prevent a recurrence of the recent postal strikes, and the establishment of a system of arbitration between workmen and employers, which he thought would in a great measure obviate strikes.

"For internal peace," said the Premier, "is as important as external peace."

As the Premier left the city the manifestants crowded round him and there was a sharp tussle between them and his supporters, many blows being exchanged and some shots fired in the air. A number of persons were arrested.

The Opposition candidate, the Socialist, M. Lorris, who was thought to have been responsible for the demonstration, strongly disavowed it. The residents of Saint Chamond strongly deprecate the occurrence, as a reflection on the city.

An individual who was arrested while trying to make his way into the banquet, which was attended by the Premier, was found to be a Spanish anarchist. He was armed with a revolver.

CRUEL PERSECUTIONS OF JEWS BY THE RUSSIANS

Berlin, April 11.—(N. Y. Times Cable.)—Expulsions of Jews from Russia are taking place on a scale unprecedented in extent and cruelty. The details received by the German Jewish Relief Association indicate that the number is increasing from day to day, and already reaches far into the thousands.

The entire Jewish population of the Russian Empire is in a state of the utmost terror. Almost every community outside the limited regions where Jews are permitted to dwell, is daily the scene of wholesale evictions. Jews who have lived for many years in the Baltic provinces and also those resident in Kieff are being persecuted with especial severity.

In Kieff alone 1,200 families have been deprived of the right of further domicile.

One thousand six hundred families of Bokhara Jews have been driven from their homes during the last few weeks, and now find themselves in a most desperate plight. The Emir of Bokhara, acting in co-operation with the Jews' Russian persecutors, has refused to permit them to re-enter the country.

Even in the so-called settlement districts, where Jews are supposed to enjoy the unmolested right of domicile, the expulsion regime is in full swing. The authorities have harked back to the notorious Ignatieff "May laws" of 1882 and 1891, and with unrestrained cruelty are driving out the comparatively few Jews who inhabit the settlement districts and are compelling them to seek refuge in the overcrowded cities, where starvation and pauperism sooner or later compel them to flee the country.

Protests at the Russian Ministry of the Interior, which formerly resulted in the abatement of the particularly harsh expulsion methods, have now become entirely futile. There is no longer any doubt that the persecution movement has the support of the highest and most responsible authorities.

While the expulsions are taking place the Jews are being robbed more and more of their educational rights. Until recently the higher private schools were permitted to accept as many Jewish students as they pleased, regardless of the limited percentage which is allowed to attend the public schools. The Minister of Education, M. Schwartz, has now issued a decree prohibiting private schools from receiving a higher percentage of Jewish scholars than the public schools. He also ordained that the time which Russian Jews spend abroad in studying is no longer to be reckoned as "legal education."

CRISIS SEEMS POSSIBLE FOR ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE

London, April 11.—(N. Y. Times cable.)—Now that it is beginning to be realized here how keenly America is interested in the recent developments of the far eastern policy there is a growing disposition among Englishmen to study the bearings of the Anglo-Japanese treaty of alliance.

That treaty has been denounced in vehement terms this week from two different quarters, and the question of its renewal four years hence has been put in the terse form of "Great Britain's choice — Japan or the United States."

The problem of the Pacific ocean was a subject of debate at the monthly dinner of the Authors' Club, where non-literary topics are frequently selected for discussion. Earl Stanhope was the chief speaker, and although he diplomatically refrained from expressing disapproval of Japanese methods, the tenor of his speech indicated that he shares to a considerable extent that distrust of Japan's sudden extension of territory and powers which, backed as it is by the command of the Pacific, is causing alarm in Australia and America.

Japan, he said, was at the parting of the ways. She had to decide in the near future whether she intended to hold her colonies for her own good, to suck them dry after England's old colonial manner, or whether she would govern principally with a view to their betterment, and only indirectly for her own.

Lord Stanhope plainly intimated his belief that Japanese ambitions were such that, if Englishmen were to retain their own high ideals, they could have no part or lot in them.

Other speakers went further. F. B. Wooman said: English people should beware lest the Anglo-Japanese alliance handed over to Japan the supremacy of the Pacific Ocean, for with it would go Australia, India, Hawaii, the Philippines, and Alaska, and that would give the supremacy of the human race to the yellow man.

The World, of which Lord Winterton is editor, makes a special feature of an article urging "serious reconsideration of the British policy in regard to Japan." According to this article Japan is to the United States, strategically and commercially, and, in fact, in every way, what Germany is to Great Britain.

"To a large extent," continues the writer, Lancelot Lawton, "we were compelled to enter into the original alliance with Japan, for at that time we were afraid of Russia, and not without reason. It is within the writer's knowledge that while negotiations for the first treaty of alliance were in progress the late Prince Ito was making certain friendly overtures in St. Petersburg.

MURDER CHARGED

Robt. Parker, Aged Seventy, Surrenders to the Police at Tweed.

Tweed, April 11.—Robert Parker, aged 70, Saturday night gave himself up to the town police. He was wanted on a charge of murder in connection with the death of William Masters, the septuagenarian farm laborer, found on the road with a bullet wound.

Parker is a hunter and trapper, living with his wife on a small patch of land, some two and a half miles from town and about a hundred yards from the Masters' home. He denies that he had anything to do with the shooting, though he disappeared from his home Friday morning and was not seen again until he came into the town last night, accompanied by William Ferguson, a brother-in-law.

Parker has a quarrelsome disposition and has been heard to threaten to shoot Masters, because he said Masters or his children had been interferring with his mink traps. Parker has lived in this vicinity for over twenty years. He has three grown-up sons, who do not live here. He has had trouble with other neighbors. Parker says he can show that he was not in the locality when Masters was slain.

Masters, who was a farm laborer, leaves a widow and family of four boys and one girl. Friday morning he went out with horse and wagon to gather wood. Some time later the horse returned to the house, and one of the sons, going to search for him father, found him dead. A 44-calibre bullet had passed through his heart.

METHODIST PASTOR AFTER FIELDING

Ottawa, April 11.—Rev. R. G. Peever, pastor of McLeod street Methodist Church, yesterday morning condemned Hon. W. S. Fielding for having conducted his tariff negotiations at Albany on Sunday.

It ill-becomed, he said, a Minister of a Government which had passed the Lord's Day Act, to desecrate the day by conducting public business upon it.

MR. AYLESWORTH'S REPLY TO CRITICS

Ottawa, April 11.—Referring to Dr. Shearer's criticisms of his conduct toward the Miller bill, Hon. A. B. Aylesworth said:

"Yes, I saw the bill before it was drafted. Oh, yes, but I didn't say I approved of it. No, I said the bill was quite well calculated to accomplish the purpose which the promoters of the bill evidently had in mind. I remember now, that—yes, that was the phrase I used. I never gave anybody to understand that I approved of it. Quite the contrary.

"I told Mr. Miller weeks ago that the bill they were proposing would, in my opinion, render the maker of a personal bet liable to prosecution."

BRAKEMAN DIES FROM INJURIES

St. Thomas, April 11.—Thomas Jeffery of St. Thomas, N.C.R. brakeman, died Saturday night from injuries received in a rear-end freight collision at Waterford at one o'clock Saturday morning.

Several cars were smashed and the engine of the second train badly damaged. Pipes burst and the escaping steam badly scalded Engineer Foff and Brakeman Jeffery of St. Thomas.

The wreck will be investigated, but it is apparent that the second freight had run out of her block, endangering the first train.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS IN CZAR'S LAND

St. Petersburg, April 11.—The first women's right association has been formed in Russia. Among its chief objects is agitation for the modification of Premier Stolypin's Land Act for converting commune peasants into freehold farmers.

The agitation will take the direction of enabling women to join the land purchase scheme and eventually to become owners.

A Freak Calf.

Bowmanville, April 11.—William Tennant, a local veterinary, came across a freak calf which was born with its heart on the outside, suspended by its vessels and in the pericardial sack. There was a two-inch hole through the sternum, just back of the fore legs. It died within a day.

WALTER ROSS TO GO TO THE GALLOWS ON 20TH OF MAY

Slayer of Percy Parkinson to Pay Full Penalty—James Moran, Who Killed Wm. Dyson in a Fight, is Sentenced to Serve Ten Years in Penitentiary.

North Bay, April 11.—Deploring the seeming growth in the disregard for law evidenced by the fact that, in the past week, three murder charges were tried by a jury, though in only one was the capital crime held proven, by the jury, Chief Justice Mulock on Saturday night imposed sentences as follows:

Walter Ross, for the murder of his companion-prospector, Percy Parkinson, to be hanged on Friday, May 20.

James Moran, for manslaughter, in causing the death of Wm. Dyson in a fight 10 years in penitentiary.

Saul Gouin, acquitted of murder, but convicted of assault and doing bodily harm - sentenced postponed.

Early Sunday morning the jury trying Saul Gouin, accused of shooting Mary Smith, in a shack near Cobalt two years ago, returned an acquittal after two hours consideration. At a previous trial the jury disagreed, with ten for acquittal. A hum of satisfaction through the court was answered by the declaration of G. T. Blackstock, K.C., crown prosecutor, that the verdict was a traversity on British justice.

An unusual feature of the case was the recording the verdict by Judge Mulock until certain portions of the evidence, wrongly interpreted by the crown, had been re-read. He asked the jury to again retire for consideration. This they refused to do, stating that all the evidence had been carefully considered, and a verdict been arrived at.

When the court resumed on Saturday, Gouin was placed on trial charged with wounding with intent to kill and wounding and causing serious bodily harm. He was convicted on the latter charge, the jury being out two hours.

Justice Mulock, in passing sentences, made scathing denunciation of Gouin, whom he charged with being guilty of cold-blooded murder, without a shadow of reason or excuse. He sent him back to jail until the autumn Assises, when he will receive sentence.

The scene in the crowded courtroom was one of intense interest, as the audience listened to Justice Mulock's solemn and charitable remarks as he sentenced Ross and Moran, and his denunciation of Gouin as a murderer for whom no sympathy could be extended, but to whom a degree of mercy had been extended by the various jurors who had considered his case.

He deplored the seeming growth of disregard for the law, and hoped that, in this district, the lesson of this court would result in men better controlling their passions and living good and true lives.

MURDER TRIAL AT COBOURG

Cobourg, April 11.—The Assizes, which open here on Monday, present an unusual feature in that the Italian, George Moncuro, will come before the court on a charge of murder. It is a long time since there has been such a charge in a Cobourg court. Justice Teetzel will preside, and E. A. DuVernet, K.C., Toronto, is crown counsel.

Commander Peary at Montreal.

Montreal, April 11.—Before an audience of about eight hundred persons in the arena Commander Peary gave a lantern lecture on Saturday evening on his trip to the North Pole.

Gave Birth to Triplets.

Cargill, April 11.—Mrs. John Beckberger of this village gave birth to triplets yesterday, two girls and a boy. They are all doing well.

APPOINTMENT OF A SOCIALIST BISHOP

London, April 11.—The appointment of an Advanced Churchman as successor to Bishop King at Lincoln has caused more distress among Tory churchmen than to the Evangelicals. There is less talk about sacerdotalism than there was when Mr. Gladstone nominated Dr. King, but much more about extreme politics. Canon Hicks, the Bishop-elect, is a thoroughgoing Radical, in sympathy with the labor movement. He is even described by excited Tories as a Socialist, like Hardie. As the Bishops of Birmingham and Truro are classed with him as Socialist prelates, he will not have a lonesome feeling on the episcopal bench.

An Interesting Lecture

Rev. E. A. Pearson, B.A., will lecture on his Italian tour on Monday evening, April the 11th, in the auditorium of the Murray street Baptist church. The public will be cordially welcomed. Admission free.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Preparations are being made for another world cruise of the U. S. fleet.

W. Ponto, an aged resident of Berlin, Ont., was killed by falling from a window.

Two Chinamen were murdered in New York and two in Philadelphia yesterday.

W. Ponto, aged 75, of Berlin, Ont., was fatally hurt by falling from his bedroom window.

Thaddeus W. Tyler, the original of Longfellow's "Village Blacksmith," is dead at Lynn, Mass.

B. & O. Southwestern Railway switchmen have accepted an increase of three cents per hour.

On April 18, motion will be made at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, to quash the Almonte local option bylaw.

Capt. Tatlow was thrown out of his buggy at Victoria, B.C., and is in a critical condition from his injuries.

Socialists and Radicals held a most impressive demonstration in favor of Prussian suffrage reform in Berlin.

Owen Sound ratepayers on April 30 will vote on a bylaw to loan $20,000 to the Imperial Portland Cement Co.

Almonte's financial statement shows a deficit of $2,000, but council, by one vote, defeated a resolution to investigate the cause.

Next to France, the U. S. is the largest exporter of autos, and Canada is her best customer, taking 1,230 machines last year.

The demand for help from the west is very keen. It is estimated that 12,000 men could find immediate employment on the farms.

The plants of the Union Drawn Steel Co. and the Acme Typewriting Co. at Beaver Falls, Pa., were burned Saturday night; loss $50,000.

Dr. Hodge of Clark University, Worcester, Mass., is coming to Ontario to examine a nest of a wild pigeon said to have been found here.

It is estimated that 80,000 goats perished in the Frio and Neuces Valleys, Texas, as a result of the recent heavy rains, accompanied by cold winds.

ST. CATHARINES MAN IS KILLED

Niagara Falls, N.Y., April 11.—Early yesterday, E. R. Hughes was arrested for fracturing the skull of Pte. Mooney at Fort Niagara Saturday. Hughes was working at the old fort. When Mooney's back was turned, Hughes struck him on the head with a shovel.

John Finlayson, tailor, of St. Catharines, was killed by a freight train at Main street crossing, at three o'clock yesterday morning.

TERRIBLE DEATH OF BUSINESS MAN

Vancouver, B.C., April 11.—F. E. P. McMain, a well-known business man, formerly of Spokane, and Coleman, Alta., went to a friend's office in the eighth story of the Exchange Building and climbed out of a window with the apparent intention of taking a photograph from the fire escape, but slipping, he fell and was horribly crushed. He was 36 years of age, and formerly manager of the Royal Bank at Grand Forks, B.C. His wife is in Seattle.

GIRL HAZED BY BY STUDENTS

Bridgeport, Conn., April 11.—Lorraine Clark, 14 years old, a member of the freshman class of the local high school, is under treatment at a sanitarium in Brateleboro, Vermont, suffering from the effects of her initiation on Feb. 6 last, in one of the school secret societies.

According to the girl's story, she was made to drink on the night of the initiation a concoction, one of the ingredients of which was kerosene, and later made to eat macaroni which had been boiled in soap. After undergoing that part of the initiation, she says, she was tossed in a blanket.

Seventy-Five Buildings Burned.

Harrisburg, Pa., April 11.—The business section of Middletown, nine miles from this city, an important manufacturing town of about 10,000 people, was swept by fire yesterday, about 75 buildings being burned, with a loss of about $400,000. By the combined efforts of firemen from three other places and the use of explosives the fire was stopped.

THE ATHABASCA AT OWEN SOUND

Owen Sound, April 11.—The Canadian Pacific liner Athabasca, which arrived at 1.30 p.m. yesterday, was the first steel tonnage to reach this port this season. The steamer was on dock at Collingwood all winter undergoing repairs necessary following her grounding on Flower Pot Island last fall, and also for the purpose of having 35 feet added to her length. The first passenger accommodation has been increased 20 per cent.

EXCITING FIRE AT THE CAPITAL

Ottawa, April 11.—Fire at the residence of E. Archambault imperilled the lives of his wife and two daughters, her mother and an uncle. A son returning at 11 p.m. found the house filled with smoke. All got out except Mrs. Archambault, who would not leave her mother, an invalid, who could not be moved. Chief Graham sealed the bedroom by plugging the space around the door, and by covering the invalid with a tarpaulin. The other woman was taken down a ladder.

NINTH DREADNOUGHT HAS BEEN LAUNCHED

The Colossus is the first British battleship to be built on the principle of rising inner turrets; so that the guns can be trained over the after most main armament. Ten twelve inch guns will be so placed that six can be trained ahead, eight astern and all ten on either beam.

INSULATION OF ELECTRIC WIRES

The Walpole Rubber Company, of Montreal, in a letter to the Review, says that in any municipality where an electric light plant is maintained, the ordinances provided for the protection of the public, should be as strictly enforced as though dealing with gas, dynamite or any other dangerous and health menacing fluid or commodity. "One of the required merits in such cases," says the letter, is that the insulation used on electric wires shall be found to withstand any voltage required of it, but for the sake of economy, or through ignorance or indifference, this most important feature is very often disregarded or overlooked—until after the fire."

MAKE IT WIDELY KNOWN

The fact that the Canadian General Electric Company's new works are to be erected in Peterborough should be used as an advertisement to draw other industries to the city. This is one of the great industries of Canada. The name of the company is known in every town and city of the Dominion. Every manufacturer in Canada knows the importance of the Canadian General Electric Company. Industries are gregarious. One attracts others, especially those of similar character. This is well illustrated in England where different towns are noted for their special lines of industries. When building operations begin on the new works the City Council should make it widely known throughout Canada and the United States.

OVER ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS

It is triumphantly announced that the revenue of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31st, will be over one hundred million dollars. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier were leading the Opposition, instead of being at the head of the Government, he would declare that every cent of this one hundred million dollars was taken from the people of Canada. He would say that the expenditure of this vast sum of money by the Government was inexcusable and that if he were in power he would cut it down at least one-half. When a Conservative Government collected and expended a little more than one-third of that amount he denounced the expenditure as outrageous and said he would greatly reduce it when he got into power. Instead of reducing it he has steadily increased it, so that during the past year the expenditure on consolidated fund account was about eighty-one millions, and the expenditure on capital account $31,461,686, a total of nearly $112,500,000, or about twelve million dollars more than the revenue.

The Review would not object to this vast expenditure of money if it were for the development of the country, but almost every Government transaction that comes into the light of day reveals that a great part of the money is not being expended for the public good. The aim of the Government seems to be to devise schemes of spending money that will empty the public treasury into the pockets of Liberal favorites, who are expected to show their gratitude by contributing largely to the Liberal campaign fund.

BETTER THAN RECIPROCITY

To what class of people in the United States would our farmers sell their products if the United States tariff wall were removed? Would they expect to sell to the farmers of the United States? No, certainly not. They would expect to sell to the people in the cities, to the manufacturers of the United States, their employees and the people directly and indirectly dependent upon them.

A workman in a Canadian factory has just as good an appetite as a workman in a factory of the United States. The United States is a great manufacturing country, because the farmers of that country have for many years voted in favor of high protection. It is a waste of time to try to get fair reciprocity from the United States. Even if the United States Government could be induced to agree to such an agreement the United States Senate would never sanction a treaty that would be advantageous to Canada. But there is a way in which Canadian farmers can get all they seek when they ask for reciprocity with the United States. As already shown, what they seek is the privilege of selling farm products to American manufacturers and their employees. If they had full access to the United States market they could only hope to supply a small proportion of the food consumed by the workmen of the United States, for they would have to compete with millions of American farmers. But if the Canadian tariff on all manufactured goods that can be economically produced in Canada were raised as high as the United States tariff a great number of American companies who are now manufacturing goods for Canadian consumption would establish branch factories in Canada, giving employment to workmen who would have to get their food supplies from Canadian farmers. The effect of this movement of factories from the United States to Canada would be to give our farmers a better market for their products than they could secure by a reciprocity treaty.

The agitation in the United States in favoring of lowering the protective tariff is due almost entirely to the rise in prices. Prices began to rise just about the time the McKinley tariff was adopted and many Americans imagine that the tariff caused the high prices.

The Canadian Government lowered the tariff.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

WEDDING BELLS

BLAKELY—ROBINSON.

On Wednesday evening, March 23rd, at 6 o'clock, a very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. J. W. Robinson, Otonabee, when Edith Sophy, his third daughter, was united in holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. John Blakely, South Monaghan. The ceremony, which took place under neath a white arch, entwined with flowers and evergreens, was performed by Rev. Mr. Johnston, pastor of Zion Methodist church. The bride, who entered the drawing room leaning on the arm of her father, looked charming in a princess gown of cream silk mulene trimmed with insertion and braid, and carrying a bouquet of white carnations. She was unattended, save by her little niece, Lillie May Ritchie, who looked very sweet in white silk, carrying a basket of carnations and hyacinths. The groom's gift to the bride was a watch set in gold bracelet, and to the flower girl a gold signet ring set with pearl and rubies.

After the ceremony about forty guests partook of a sumptuous wedding supper. A very enjoyable evening was spent in music and games, after which the bridal couple left, amid showers of rice, for their new home in South Monaghan. They have the best wishes of their many friends.

WARNING

Since its introduction into Canada the sales of Parisian Sage have been phenomenal. This success has led to many imitations similar in name. Look for them; they are not the genuine. See that the girl with the Auburn hair is on every package. You can always get the genuine at Wm. Madill's drug store.

Parisian Sage is the quickest acting and most efficient hair tonic in the world.

It is made to conform to Dr. Sangerbund's (of Paris) proven theory that dandruff, falling hair, baldness and scalp itch are caused by germs.

Parisian Sage kills these dandruff germs and removes all trace of dandruff in two weeks, or money back; it stops falling hair and itching scalp and prevents baldness.

And remember that baldness is caused by dandruff germs, those little hard working, persistent devils that day and night do nothing but dig into the roots of the hair and destroy its vitality.

Parisian Sage is a daintily perfumed hair dressing, not sticky or greasy, and any woman who desires luxuriant and bewitching hair can get it in two weeks by using it. 50 cents a large bottle at all druggists.

Followed His Victim to Deathbed.

New York, April 11.—A savage audacity that shocked even old-timers, hardened to gang warfare on the east-side, marked a fatal stabbing affray last night. The aggressor followed his victim to a hospital, and stooping over him where he lay dying, whispered: "If you don't die, I'll get you yet." Before the horrified attendants could catch breath he had fled. Miller died a few minutes later, but not until he had given the name of his murderer.

DO YOU USE PILLS?

If In Doubt About the Right Pills to Use Read the Following Letter Carefully:

"I am one of those persons whose system requires aid," writes Mr. Young Gledhill, from Picton, "but it is so easily affected by reason of the great sensitiveness of the bowels that ordinary drastic pills inflict great injury to the delicate coating, and excite such persistent activity as to be with difficulty checked.

"I wish in the highest terms to express the great value of Dr. Hamilton's Pills in cases like mine, and I am sure also for elderly people and the very weak, there is no pill like them.

"Speaking of my own experience with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, I can say they have proved the most stimulating pills for the liver I have found. I have proved their tonic action upon digestion, and the same results have been secured by friends upon whom I have urged their use. The manufacturers are to be congratulated upon possessing so valuable a prescription, and the public should know that so valuable a remedy has been placed at their command."

No other pill for constipation, for liver, kidney, or stomach trouble, compares with Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they are mild and sure always to restore health. Refuse substitutes. Sold by all dealers, 25c per box, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston Ont.

FRENCH ONTARIO'S LEADER.

Hon. N. A. Belcourt Is Head of Provincial Congress.

Hon. Napoleon Antoine Belcourt, ex-member for Ottawa in the Commons, ex-Speaker of the House and now a member of His Majesty's Privy Council and of the Canadian Senate, won his degree of Master of Laws from Laval in 1888, cum summa dignitate. That laudatory annotation on his university degree may well be applied to the past twenty years of his life in Ottawa as a leader of the local Bar, as a representative of his fellow-citizens in the Commons and in the Senate, as a sort of general impresario of Liberalism in the capital, and as a leader in a large variety of movements of public importance. Last month he was elected president of the French-Canadian Congress of Ontario, organised by some two hundred thousand French-Canadians of the province, with a view to the encouragement of education and the establishment of bi-lingual schools in the French-speaking districts of the province, the maintenance of an adequate representation of the French-Canadian electors in the Senate, the encouragement of temperance among the modern coureurs de bois in the lumber districts of the north, and, in general, the betterment of conditions and the maintenance of the radical representation and rights of the French-Canadian population of Ontario.

As president of such an organization, no better man could have been chosen than Mr. Belcourt. Descended from the early French settlers at Three Rivers, Senator Belcourt represents the culture and the finesse of the race whence he sprang. At the same time he is a loyal and large-minded Imperialist, as witness his suggestion at the Board of Trade banquet in Ottawa recently that Parliament should ask Earl Grey to transmit to His Majesty King Edward an invitation from his loyal subjects in Canada to visit the Dominion, coupled with the suggestion that Edward the Peacemaker might crown his work by bringing about an alliance for the peace of the world between France, the old mother country of Canada, and Great Britain and the United States, the dominating powers of the old and new worlds.

Senator Belcourt is a native of Toronto, where he was born 49 years ago. He was educated in St. Joseph's Seminary, Three Rivers, in arts, and at Laval University in law. Admitted to the Ontario Bar at the age of 24, he has achieved a leadership among the Bar of eastern Ontario. Since 1891 he has been a member of the law faculty of Ottawa University, which gave him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1895. In 1896 he resigned his position as crown attorney for Carleton County to contest Ottawa for the Commons, redeeming the seat which had been steadily Conservative since 1878. He was re-elected at the general elections of 1900 and 1904, his majority in the latter case being over one thousand. Mr. Belcourt succeeded Hon. Mr. Brodeur as Speaker of the Commons when the former became Minister of Marine, and he discharged the duties of the office with dignity and ability. He was founder and first president of the Club Nationale of Ottawa, retaining that office for ten years consecutively. Among the score of other offices which he has held may be mentioned the chairmanship of the public accounts committee of the Commons, the vice-presidency of the Ontario Liberal Association, and the presidency of the Ottawa Hunt Club.

Alas, Poor Freshie!

Principal Hutton, of Toronto University, is a man of very quiet and reserved manners; but that he is rather a dangerous person to try to take a fall out of, is evidenced by a story going the rounds just now.

It seems that just before Principal Hutton left for Europe a few months ago, he was reading a roll-call at the University. His accent and manner are decidedly English, and the evil genius of one of the "freshies" suggested to him to make game of it. Therefore, when this name was called, he rose in his place, and with a quadruple-plate English accent answered:

"Heah I"

There was a general snicker, but it rose into a roar when Principal Hutton, gazing intently at the ingenious youth, inquired blandly: "Wheah?"

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

With a great leaping of the heart he wondered if he could be the cause of her hidden grief. Trafford had hinted as much, and yet the idea was too grotesque. She must have known that a sign from her would have brought him back at any time. He would have scouted the very thought had it not offered a straw for his drowning hope to cling to. Besides, it was not an unheard of thing for a beautiful woman to love an ugly man. He could think of several instances among his own acquaintances. Was it possible, after all, that the miracle had been wrought for him?

CHAPTER XVIII.

WHEN they reached an avenue of towering elms, touched already with the yellow brown of autumn, Wiltshire was able to take his place by her side.

"This is our way," she said. "We have a little gate farther down that leads into our own grounds. I'm glad you've come out, because I like showing my garden to people who haven't seen it. Lady Alice was good enough to compare it to the famous one at your Irish place, but I dare say she did that only to please me."

"By the way, you've heard from Alice lately, haven't you?"

"Yes. She wrote to give me the queen's kind message about—about my portrait."

Wiltshire noticed the instant of hesitation and observed her sharply. She continued to walk on, with head erect, in the resolute fashion he had already remarked as being new to her, but no touch of color came into her pale cheek.

"I suppose you know that the king was so much pleased with Winship's picture of the queen that he has made him stay at Sandringham to paint the Princess Victoria."

"No. I didn't know it. I'm so glad."

She glanced toward him, but again he got nothing from his scrutiny. It seemed to him, however, that the old appealing look was gone and that in its place had come something detached, uplifted, which caused him a sudden sinking of the heart.

"I might as well hope to marry an angel," was the thought that passed through his mind. Aloud he said: "Yes; it's a fine thing for Winship. Alice writes me that owing to his being kept so long at Sandringham he's had to cut short the visit he was going to make at Edenbridge. She hopes to have him for a night or two, but not more. I believe he has orders ahead that will keep him busy for the next two years."

"I'm so glad," she said again.

"I thought you would be," he went on, "especially after what you said of the family at Monte Carlo. Do you remember?"

"Yes, perfectly. I ought to say perhaps that I found you were right and that it wasn't possible to do what I thought of then."

"You've done a great deal better. He's a made man through—what shall I say?—through your co-operation."

"You mean the portrait. I was only an accident in that. He would have had the same success with anybody else. It was bound to come."

"Perhaps so, and yet the hand that lifts us up is the one to which we must be grateful. We can't say that another would have done as well."

If Paula betrayed herself at all it was then. She stopped in her walk and confronted him.

"I want to tell you something, duke," she began, with the forced self possession he had already remarked in her. "I should like you to know it before you see papa. I speak of it because—well, because of what we talked about that day at Monaco. If my father ever owed Mr. Winship anything he doesn't now."

"No?"

"No. Mr. Winship found the means by which to repay himself. It wasn't in money. It was in something else. Mr. Winship wouldn't take the money."

"Do you mean that your father offered to"—

"Yes, but Mr. Winship refused."

"And of course that hurt your father."

"You'll see. That's one reason why I'm telling you. Papa is very much changed. He's aged in every way. I want you to be prepared for it."

"Am I to understand that Winship had the power"—

"He had the power to wound my father deeply, and he used it. I can't explain myself any further. I only want you to know that papa isn't what he used to be. Dear mamma's death was a great blow to him—and then this other thing—and everything"—

She broke off with a pathetic little gesture and turned to walk on again.

"I understand," Wiltshire murmured, though he did not understand at all.

Paula said no more, and he felt it best to let the subject drop. They went on in silence, emerging all of a sudden into the open country, with a wide prospect of fields, reaped and yellow or lush and green. Dotted about in the hills all round, white chateaux stood in pleasant nooks, sheltered by overhanging woods.

"This is our place," Paula said, passing through a wicket gate into a grove of firs. In a minute or two they came out on the lowest of three wide terraces, with gardens designed in the style of Le Notre, leading up to the cheerful red brick facade of a house at once dignified and homelike. Hedges of box and privet were broken by statues and sculptured urns, while rows of conically clipped yews made quaint and stately contrast to the majestic elms and chestnuts where the gardens merged into the park. Down from the center of the house came a broad walk, straight as a ribbon, descending from terrace to terrace by flights of marble steps. Each terrace had its pair of fountains, of which the two on the middle plane were playing. Not far behind the chateau the ground rose gently into a wooded hill.

"Charming!" Wiltshire commented as they stood still for a minute to look up over the successive stages of blossom and verdure. "It does recall our garden at Kilmaurice, as Alice said, only this is the real thing, and that's the imitation."

"I'm glad you like it," Paula returned. "I'm very fond of it. Papa bought the place only for week ends and for entertaining passing Americans who like to see a bit of the country, but we've come to like it better than any of our houses. Ah, there's papa now. He's got back. Papa, dear," she called, "here's an old friend whom I'm sure you'll be glad to see."

When Trafford turned from the idle contemplation of a peacock spreading his tail his face took on slowly the expression of admiring appreciation it had sometimes shown to his associates when they had carried through some unexpectedly successful deal. When he laughed and clapped his hands and called out "Gadi" in a big, jovial voice Wiltshire knew that his own prompt action had met with approval and that Paula would hear nothing of the lunch at Henry's in the morning.

"It's done him good to see you already," Paula murmured as Trafford came down to meet them, shouting words of welcome. "And," she added quietly, "it does me good, too, to see him look pleased again."

"If it only needs that"— Wiltshire began, but Trafford was upon them, and they could say no more.

At tea in the English garden, on the other side of the house, Paula was conscious of the fact that they had not been so cheerful since long before her mother died. For the first time in months the ashen hue had disappeared from Trafford's face, while the old light of power stole back into his dulled eyes. Wiltshire, too, was changed. She had noticed that from the beginning, but now she had time to remark the fact more consciously. It was as if he had acquired the dignity that comes from mental or moral suffering. That reflection brought a pang with it, and the pity which had always entered into her regard for him took on a new degree of tenderness.

It required but little urging to induce Wiltshire to stay and dine. Again Paula had the sensation that life had come into their atmosphere once more. Her father told his favorite stories with the relish he would have had a year ago and laughed with his old time jollity as he made the familiar points. He absorbed Wiltshire's attention with the curious fascination he always had for men, and it both pleased and amused her to see that when she left them at the end of dinner neither of them noticed it, except to rise as she passed out.

It was then, however, that Trafford's manner changed. He told no more anecdotes, and presently as they smoked he went back to politics. From politics he passed to business and from business to philanthropy. Then for a few minutes conversation flagged. Wiltshire felt that they had been working up to something and waited for the cue.

"Speaking of philanthropy," Trafford said, with a sudden effort, "I've got a lot of money I should like to give away."

"That's easily done, as a rule," Wiltshire laughed.

"As a rule—yes." Trafford went on slowly. "But my case is a little outside the rule. I wonder if I could make you understand it. I've often thought that if ever I had the chance I should like to talk it out with you confidentially."

"Oh, confidentially, of course," Wiltshire said politely.

"You see, I've given away a deuce of a lot of money in one way or another. I've given to charities, I've given to churches, I've given to hospitals, I've given to orphanages and colleges and libraries and picture galleries and every other infernal thing there is to give to. Now I should like to do something different from all that."

He paused to puff nervously at his cigar. Wiltshire waited for him to go on.

"I don't have to tell you," he resumed, "that I've been what is called a successful man. Well, to make my successes a good many poor devils have had to fail. I know that I'm under no obligation to consider them—none whatever. And yet as I grow old I'll be hanged if I don't think of them a good deal. Perhaps it's nerves or perhaps it's nothing but the living every day with such a creature as that little girl of mine. Whatever the reason, there's the fact that I should be glad to shuffle back some of this useless money into the hands of those who need to—well, who need it more than I, at any rate."

"How would you propose to do it?" Wiltshire asked, puffing quietly.

"There you've got me. That's where I don't see my way. I suppose to you it seems easy."

"No; on the contrary, I can quite understand that it might be a ticklish job."

SCIATICA
EXPECTED DEATH ANY DAY

Another Case Where Life Was Saved and Health Restored by "Nerviline."

It is because he feels it his solemn duty to tell to the world his faith in Nerviline that Victor P. Hires makes the following declaration: "For three years I was in the Royal Mail service, and in all kinds of weather had to meet the night trains. Dampness, cold, and exposure brought on sciatica that affected my left side. Sometimes an attack would come on that made me powerless to work. I was so nearly a complete cripple that I had to give up my job. I was in despair, completely cast down because the money I spent on trying to get well was wasted. I was speaking to my chemist one day, and he recommended "Nerviline." I had this good liniment rubbed on several times a day, and got relief. In order to build up my general health and improve my blood I used Ferrozone, one tablet with each meal. I continued this treatment four months and was cured. I have used all kinds of liniments, and can truthfully say that Nerviline is far stronger, more penetrating, and infinitely better than anything else for relieving pain. I urge everyone with lumbago, neuralgia, rheumatism, or sciatica to use Nerviline. I know it will cure them."

CURED SIX YEARS

There isn't a more highly-esteemed citizen in Westchester than Mr. Hires. What he says can be relied upon. For six years since being cured he hasn't had a single relapse. Don't accept anything from your dealer but "Nerviline." 50 cents per bottle, trial size, 25c; sold everywhere, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

PUTNAM'S PAINLESS CORN EXTRACTOR

"It's infernally ticklish. It's one of the queer elements of the situation. Here I am, a well meaning man, with no other longing than to do good, and I'll be hanged if I can! I could give you the names of a dozen people of enemies or old enemies' widows and orphans—whom I should be willing to set up for life, and yet I doubt if they'd let me. You'd hardly believe that."

"Oh, yes!" Wiltshire replied dryly. "A little knowledge of human nature makes the thing clear enough."

"That's it. You've got that knowledge, and so I thought that you might help me."

"Oh!"

Wiltshire withdrew his cigar from his lips and looked round with some astonishment.

"I mean," Trafford explained, half apologetically, "that if in any particular instance you had the chance to facilitate the thing"—

"Of course, of course. Were you thinking of any one especially?"

"No—no—that is—I know you're befriended the family of that—that young Winship—who—who—painted a portrait"—

"Quite so. We were speaking of him at lunch this morning, if you remember."

"You may not be aware that his father was an old opponent of mine."

"I know the circumstances vaguely."

"Then I won't go into them further than to say he was the kind of old fel-

"Do anything, so long as they take the money."

low you couldn't spare. I did my best to save him and his family from ruin, but when they were bent on running into it I had to let them. That's all over years ago. Now he has this son and an old maid daughter. Don't you understand, Wiltshire, that with more money than I know what to do with—with money of which I could take three-fourths and bury it in a hole in the ground and still remain a rich man—don't you understand that I should be glad"—

He stopped as if searching for a word.

"I quite understand," Wiltshire hastened to say. "But isn't it the case that Winship is getting beyond the need of generosity of that sort?"

"No one is beyond the need of what he can get. And whether he's so or not I want the fellow to have the money. I want to know that he's taken it. What he does with it afterward or what his sister does with it won't matter a twopenny hang as far as I'm concerned, but I want to know that they've had it. I'd leave it on his doorstep, I'd stuff it down his throat, just for the satisfaction of getting rid of it."

He laughed grimly and threw the stump of his cigar on the ash tray.

"Why don't you tell him so?"

"I've done so." Trafford answered after a moment's hesitation. "He wouldn't take it."

"Then what would you expect me to do?"

"Do? Do anything, so long as they take the money. I don't care a jot about their knowing it's from me. I'll give you a million dollars—£200,000—to juggle into their pockets by any tale you can invent. Gad, when I think how easy it's been to make money it seems like the irony of the very Lord above to find it so difficult to throw it away!"

There were several pertinent remarks in Wiltshire's mind, but he withheld them. As a matter of fact, he was slightly appalled by the lifting of this corner of the veil on the rich man's conscience. From the beginning of their acquaintance he had been interested in Trafford as the type of American success, while he had been drawn to him by a certain bigness and generosity in Trafford's character, but he shrank from contact with the details of his business career with the distaste of the hereditary grand seigneur. It was a relief to him when Trafford rose and, assuming another voice, affected to take the matter lightly. He himself tried to do the same.

"Winship is as pigheaded a chap as was ever driven to market," he said as they went toward the drawing room, "but I know him pretty well, and if it's any service to you I'll try to influence him for his good."

CHAPTER XIX.

THE appearance in the New York Magazine of the famous series of articles in which the history and methods of the Vermont Mining company were exposed had a clarifying effect on Paula's chaotic thought. Till then she had not been without the persistent hope that some way of reconciliation might be found between Winship and her father. "Roger loves me," she argued to herself in the first days of the separation. "He'll come back and take the money for my sake." But when she had read to a close the first of the articles that fell under her notice she had none of that hope left. "He'll not take it," she said to herself then. "No man who knew this could."

That was in July. She had picked up the current number of the New York Magazine quite casually at a news stand, not suspecting that it could contain anything of special interest to herself. She learned from it that the articles had been appearing since the previous March and ordered all the numbers to be sent to her.

The first installment dealt, among other things, with the origin of the Trafford family and contained many details of which Paula herself had little knowledge. It informed her that in the early eighteen hundreds William Trafford had been a laborer at Cannock Chase, in Staffordshire. He married a girl named Sarah Paul, by whom he had a large family, several of their descendants being miners at Cannock Chase today. John Trafford, their second son, emigrated to America about the year 1833. He settled as a farmer near Cumberland, Vt., where he married Jennie O'Mara, a pretty Irish girl, servant in the house of Julius Murray, a coal merchant in the neighboring town.

John and Jennie Trafford were thrifty, industrious people, with that instinct to rise in the world which distinguished the earlier emigrants from the British Isles. Unable themselves to read or write, they were eager to give their children the best educational advantages the neighborhood afforded. These were exhausted apparently when Andrew was fourteen and Paul was twelve. Then both lads went to work, Andrew remaining with his father on the farm, while Paul found employment as office boy with Julius Murray in the town.

TRY THE MONEY-BACK CURE FOR INDIGESTION

Nine times in ten stomach derangements are responsible for sallow complexion, dull eyes and thin body.

It is the stomach that supplies nourishing blood to the muscles, the nerves, and skin. If the stomach is healthy, plenty of nutritious matter will be absorbed by the blood. If it is not healthy, the food will ferment, and undigested, will pass along through the bowels, furnishing so little nutritious matter that the blood becomes impoverished, and the glow of health vanishes.

If you suffer from nervousness, sick headache, belching of gas, sour taste in the mouth, heaviness after eating, or any other miserable stomach disturbance, you need Mi-o-na, and the sooner you get it the quicker you will be healthier and happier.

It will relieve any distressed stomach condition almost immediately. It will cure if used according to directions. Wm. Madill sells it for 50 cents a large box, and he thinks enough of it to guarantee it to cure indigestion.

ABOUT JUDGE BECK, WHOSE UTTERANCES HAVE CAUSED A SENSATION IN THE WEST

The despatch from Edmonton, Alta., in Friday's Review regarding Judge Beck's attack on the Masonic order after becoming a Roman Catholic, attracted much attention in the city, as Judge Beck is a former resident of Peterborough. Some particulars about his career will prove interesting. The following sketch is taken from a copy of the Edmonton Bulletin of 1897:—

Judge Beck (Nicholas Dominick Beck) is another member of the Bench who, like Judge Scott, carries unmistakably with him the hall-marks of the Judge, a clear case of human co-operation with the designs of destiny. Cultured, fearless and discreet, his is a logical mind of undoubted ability, while the judicial faculty with its corresponding slowness of spoken judgment is so obvious in him that it makes itself apparent in every phase of his life. There is about him a flavor of legal precincts, something of the atmosphere of a corner of a library stocked with Lives of the Old English Lords Chancellor.

The judge is of English descent, having been born in the rectory in Cobourg, Ont., on May 4, 1857, a son of the late Rev. J. W. R. Beck, and his wife, Georgina Boulton. He was called to the Ontario Bar in 1879 and received the degree of LL.B. from Toronto University in 1881. He practised law for a short time at Peterborough, afterwards coming west to Winnipeg. He remained at the latter point for a number of years, until the lure of the Farther West and its promise reached him. He then moved to Calgary, finally in 1891 reaching Edmonton, which has so far satisfied him that he has remained there ever since. He has seen it develop from a frontier town to the present ambitious if small metropolis, and during those years he was the city's solicitor, contributing his share to its development.

In 1893 he was created a Queen's Council by the Earl of Aberdeen and was for many years president of the Law Society of the North-West Territories and editor of the Law Reports. When the Autonomy Bill, which erected Alberta and Saskatchewan into provinces, was being framed, he was one of the legal advisers consulted by the Dominion Government which spared no pains to arrive at an accurate knowledge of conditions. In this instance, as in other duties of his career the present judge but added to his reputation for ability, and when last autumn he was raised to the Bench the appointment met with general approval from the public."

Judge Nicholas D. Beck, when practicing in Peterborough, was a member of the firm of Hatton, Hatton and Beck, one of the partners being the late D. G. Hatton, and the other Mr. G. W. Hatton, who is still practicing in this city. Mr. Beck was well thought of and generally known. One branch of sport in which he was interested was rowing, and he was a member of the lawyers' crew, which for some time were champions of this locality. In those days there were a number of crews, and water sports were the fashion. On his resolving to become a Roman Catholic, and before taking the step, Mr. Beck went across to England and consulted Cardinal Newman. He is a man of fine character, absolute probity, and of a devotional turn of mind. He lived with his father, Rev. J. W. R. Beck, who was rector of St. John's at the rectory, which was opposite the present rectory, but was born at St. Leonard's, that very handsome residence in Ashburnham, which was burned to the ground. St. Joseph's hospital was afterwards built upon this site. He was twice married, his second wife being a sister of Rev. Canon Teefy, of St. Michael's College, Toronto. Judge Beck is a half-brother of Mrs. A. Stevenson, wife of Lieut.-Col Stevenson, of this city. His present utterances are in line with the policy of the Roman Catholic Church, which throughout the world has taken a firm stand against what it takes to be the enemies of the Church of Rome.

CHIMES ARE SUGGESTED FOR ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

Chimes may possibly be installed at St. John's church in the near future. The 75th anniversary of the opening of services of the present edifice will be celebrated this autumn, and it is suggested that the chimes be purchased to signalize this event. The matter has been under consideration among certain members of St. John's for some time, and will come up at the adjourned vestry meeting this evening. It is understood that the chimes will cost in the neighborhood of $1,500.

At the Morning Prayer yesterday, Rev. Canon Davidson drew attention to the suggestion of purchasing the chimes, and pointed out some of the desirable features of the proposition. It would supply a long felt want in the city, he said, at the present time, and it would be a nice thing to have them at St. John's with its central and beautiful situation. Their sweet music would be a delight to the citizens generally and in times of joy or in times of sorrow, they could be used to express the people's sentiments.

The matter, Canon Davidson said, was one for the congregation of St. John's to decide, and he hoped it would be given careful consideration

TRAIN SPLINTERED MILK WAGON AND SPILLED MILK

On more than one occasion a milk wagon and a fast moving train have collided with results disastrous to the milk wagon. There was no exception to this when the G.T.R. 7.10 flyer collided with Chapman's milk wagon at the crossing at Park and Bethune streets this morning. While the driver was calling at a customer's house the horse wandered across the tracks and the train ran full blast into the wagon shattering that conveyance and spilling the milk in most extravagant fashion.

MINDEN NEWSPAPER SAYS RAILWAY TO NORTH COUNTRY WOULD BE GOOD INVESTMENT

Minden Echo.—There is no railway directly out of Peterborough city into the north country, although long years ago it was a Peterborough man who advocated a road into what is now the county of Haliburton. The project was considered too expensive for the small returns possible, and the agitation for even a wooden railway was abandoned.

Later, the Provisional County of Haliburton was formed that the people of the portion of the then new county should be in a position to heavily burden themselves with the payment of a railway bonus, that would assure them of a road from Haliburton to Lindsay, from whence they could reach other points.

Peterborough finally saw that Lindsay was getting a large portion of the ever growing trade from the north and now since a railway has been built through Lindsay to Bobcaygeon cutting off another slice from the Peterborough business, Peterborough may quite properly wake up to the need of a road out of some point that will give them a share of the trade now going elsewhere.

With this end in view, and possibly that a railway so built may ultimately be further extended into New Ontario, the Peterborough Review has published several letters bearing on the desirability of such a road.

A recent article, in which appears a letter of "Lindsay Citizen," partly takes up the plan proposed by the Echo, and which receives our endorsation, because we believe a good trade would develop in forest and farm produce, besides the tourist trade, which would certainly become an important factor, for, if hundreds of people are now finding their way to the beautiful lakes of this north country without a railway, so great a distance, the trade would certainly became very great were a railway built and properly advertised. Other industries would follow the building of a road through a distance as well settled as this.

UNDERPAID WORKING GIRLS RESORT TO ILLEGIMATE MEANS OF MAKING LIVING

The alarming and widespread result of so many of the evils of the present day have become of such a character that it is imperative that they be discussed in the plainest and most straightforward manner. That is a conviction shared by many of the most serious-minded Christian reformers of the present day and is quite evidently the emphatic opinion of Rev. J. Aspinall McCuaig, of New York, vice-president of the National Christian Union for the Promotion of Social Purity. In a mass meeting of men at the Grand Opera House yesterday afternoon Mr. McCuaig gave a direct and convincing address on social impurity in its various places. He spoke broad-mindedly and fearlessly too and was not slow to criticize the Christian churches for the lack of interest they showed in underpaid working girls.

A woman, the speaker stated, was of a more trusting nature than a man. That was why so many innocent girls were led astray. In the course of his very interesting discourse Mr. Cuaig spoke of perverted sexual passion being the cause of God's wrath visiting the wrongdoers in scriptural days and conditions to-day were worse in the large American cities as in the days of Sodom and Gomorrah and God's wrath in the shape of unspeakable diseases still visited degenerate men. Mr. McCuaig had personally investigated the conditions in connection with the loathsome traffic in the United States and what he said was not merely hearsay. He referred specifically to an American city of 150,000 population, where he had made a thorough study of conditions with the assistance of a detective. He dwelt at length on the deplorable conditions in New York, Chicago and other metropolitan centres and spoke of the sad plight there of underpaid girls who came from poor families and were forced to live with not enough to pay for their board and laundry. They struggled on till they contracted debts for the necessities of life, which they found impossible to meet with their scanty incomes from their legitimate employment. In Canada conditions were better than in the United States, but there was a large amount of vice also in this fair Dominion. Morally the people were better, however generally speaking, and that was to a large extent due to the fact that the Sabbath was observed, for in a country where the Lord's Day was desecrated evils of the most destructive and demoralizing character were given birth to.

Out of 500,000 prostitutes in the United States—about an average of one for every hundred and fifty of a population of men, women and children—450,000 had originally been inadequately paid working girls.

Several ringing statements of the speaker were vigorously applauded and among these was one to the effect that it was time for men making $14 or $18 a week to cease agitating and striking for higher wages for themselves and to insist that girls starting work in factories be paid a living wage. There was not a factory in the United States or Canada that paid girls for the first year enough for them to keep body and soul together.

Mr. McCuaig insisted that many went astray because they had not received early instruction in matters of vital importance to them. They should be enlightened on them instead of kept in ognorance concerning their purposes and abuses.

Mr. McCuaig addressed a meeting of women this afternoon at three o'clock in St. Paul's Presbyterian church and will lecture to-night to a general meeting of both men and women in St. Andrew's church on the white slave traffic and our children.

WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC AND OUR CHILDREN

Subject of Address to be Given by Rev. J.A. McCuaig at St. St. Andrew's Church

"The White Slave Traffic and Our Children" will be the subject dealt with by Rev. J. A. McCuaig, of New York, at St. Andrew's church to-night at eight o'clock. The white slave traffic is one of the blights on our twentieth century civilization, and throughout the world the call has gone forth to fight the terrible evil. Mr. McCuaig will have an interesting story to tell, and as the meeting is an open one, there should be a large audience.

At George St. Church to-morrow night Mr. McCuaig will address an open meeting, his subject being "Sex and Crime."

THE OPENING OF THE NEW T.A.S. ROOMS

Will Take Place April 27 and 28 When Fine Programme Will be Given—What Has Been Done

The repairs on the new T. A. S. building, Simcoe street, recently purchased by the society, are rapidly nearing completion. The plate glass windows of the first storey have been replaced by a beautiful red pressed brick front with Indiana sand stone trimmings, which has greatly added to its appearance. The ground floor will be used for an assembly hall with a well-equipped stage and dressing room accommodation. It will conveniently seat 500 people, is well ventilated, and artistically decorated.

The whole building has been renovated and repainted, so that it gives one the impression of an entirely new construction. The electric wiring has been carefully done, and a new steam furnace added, all of which make a thoroughly convenient and modern building, which will furnish ample room for the Catholic societies of the city.

The formal opening will take place on the evenings of the 27th and 28th of this month. An excellent programme is being arranged, a prominent feature of which will be the first appearance in Peterborough of Miss Margaret McCann, the celebrated Australian songstress, who is to-day in the front rank of the interpreters of Irish and Scottish song. Since leaving Melbourne, Miss McCann has met with marked success. Whilst in England she made a number of successful appearances, notably in the Queen's Hall, and at the Scottish Clan's Association concert in London; at the City Corporation's concert in Edinburgh, Scotland; at the Gaelic Society's concert, in New York; Clan McDonald concert, Brooklyn; Hallowe'en concert, Montreal; New Year's Festival, Boston; as well as at concerts in Toronto, Ottawa, Fort William and all through Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. The press notices speak of her in the highest terms.

Two Fine Sermons

Rev. J. A. McCuaig, of New York who is in the city conducting a campaign in the cause of social purity, preached to a large congregation at Charlotte St. church yesterday morning, his subject being "The Power of the Living Christ."

At St. Paul's church in the evening Rev. Mr. McCuaig's subject was "God's Great Problem," which was defined to be how God could remain just and yet be the justifier of the sinner. Both services were excellent and made a deep impression.

More Electric Roads

When are we to get the electric roads? Campbellford is just as far away as ever, but should have close connection with the capital of the counties. A road through that town to the C.P.R. line would be a paying one. The road to Peterborough we hear nothing about now.—Cobourg Sentinel-Star.

ALD. TURNER WOULD LIKE TO HAVE RATEPAYERS' OPINION

Ald. J. J. Turner, the father of the much discussed dog by-law, would like to have an expression of opinion on the measure. Opinions for and against the by-law have been given to such an extent that the balance of opinion on the part of the ratepayers is not definitely known. Ald. Turner would like all the municipal voters to drop him a card giving their views no matter whether they are in favor of the by-law or opposed to it. In that way he will be able to find out how the ratepayers regard it. If the majority wish it enforced why it would be the proper thing to have it carried out or vice versa.

Ald. Turner says he thought it was in the best interests of the city, but is perfectly willing and in fact anxious to be governed by the wishes of the citizens.

SUCCESSFUL ANNIVERSARY AT KNOX CHURCH YESTERDAY

At the services in connection with the third anniversary of Knox Presbyterian church splendid sermons were delivered both morning and evening by Rev. A. Logan Geggie, pastor of the Parkdale Presbyterian church, Toronto.

For his morning discourse Mr. Geggie took as his text 1st Cor. 1st verse, 9th chap; "Have I not seen Jesus our Lord."

At the morning service Mr. Geggie illustrated many beautiful incidents when the apparition of our Lord turned some of the most hardened sinners to the true path. Rev. Mr. Geggie crowned his argument on some of the most striking incidents which occurred to the followers of our Lord. The vision in which our Lord appeared to Moses was the first that the preacher put before the minds of his hearers.

One day when Moses led his flocks to the mountain of Horeb, God appeared to him in the midst of a burning bush. Moses was much astonished that the bush was not consumed and approached to see what it could mean but God commanded him to stand and take off his shoes from the place, which was holy. At the appearance of the Lord Moses fell on his face. at this time chose Moses to lead the people out of Egypt and gave him Aaron as spokesman. The ravishing beauty of Christ's person and his words strengthened Moses and he went forth filled with confidence.

A man coming into this world has to meet temptations on all sides. It is necessary therefore that he put on the armour of faith, and by doing so he will be able on the judgment day to come face to face with the Creator, thus fulfilling the beautitude, "Blessed are the clean of heart, for they shall see God."

The impression of our Lord's countenance may be seen by the lasting memory left on St. John. After fifty years St. John was describing his first vision which had been greatly absorbed in his memory and told the very hour and day that the vision occurred to him.

After the martyrdom of St. Stephen Saul became one of the most active persecutors of the Christians. Resolved on their ruin, he obtained letters to the synagogues at Damascus, authorizing him to seize every man or woman that believed in the Lord. Animated with spirit and armed with the authority of the Jewish priesthood, he started for Damascus. As he approached the place, suddenly a bright light shone around him, while at the same time a voice said, "Saul, Saul, why dost thou persecute Me?" Trembling and confounded Saul went back to the place from whence he came and in the course of a few days Saul was baptised and became known as St. Paul. This great transformation was brought about by the persecutor coming face too face with the Creator.

If we can only realize what John and other men of vision saw it would strengthen us against the trials and troubles of this world of temptation.

Miss Choate's playing on Friday night at the Royal Alexandra evoked intense enthusiasm and she was presented with four beautiful bouquets.

She played Vieuxtempt's "Reverie" with wonderfully artistic finish and fine feeling, and received one of the most flattering receptions of the competition.

Wants By-Law Enforced

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—In view of the wide discussion about the dog by-law it might be well to point out the fact that there is one for the city now, and if a dog catcher were employed for the duties in connection with the by-law made plain and imperative to the police, I think it could be effectively enforced. Every dog seen running at large without a tag should be shot, and I think the present by-law would be adequate if carried out.

Yours truly,

A Temperance Fight

Peterborough, April 11th.

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—The friends in temperance will notice that the Jeffries-Johnson battle is to be fought on temperance principles. No liquor is to be allowed in the vicinity of the arena. This ought to be a lesson for people who are fighting the battle of life in Peterborough.

Yours truly,
LIVE AND LEARN.

Farcial Legislation

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—In many instances by-law and byword have been synonymous terms, through lax administration, and sometimes no effort made to carry out what purported to be a necessary decree in the interests of public welfare.

This degradation of minor law leads to violation of laws that are important and a disregard for constituted authority.

If press reports of the last council meeting are correct, Peterborough has some legislators in the council that are woefully lacking in judicial administration.

It is bad enough for a citizen to willfully volate a law, but for a member of the council to say, pass a law, but don't enforce it, is certainly very careless thought, if not criminal folly.

Another member openly states his purpose to violate the law, because it interferes with his personal convenience.

While these statements are evidently thoughtlessly expressed, they are dangerous and pernicious in their influence. Rational opposition is all right, but laxity and defiance of law are twin evils that no legislator should be guilty of.

Ald. Turner has taken the right course in the judgment of a vast majority of citizens. The dog nuisance has become unbearable and redress must come. If ever a there was ever a cur-cursed community it is Peterborough. We need this by-law, and we need it enforced, too, not because of the rabies scare, for, judging from the foam that has appeared in the press recently, there is more danger of rabies among the owners than among the dogs.

The dog is a necessity in the country, but running at large in the city he is a public nuisance, filthy, disgusting, degredating, and often dangerous, a menace to women and children especially.

As citizens we have the supreme right to demand the safety of our wives and children on the streets in preference to the mere indulgence of animal sentiment by the selfish dog owners, who would pamper his own pleasure regardless of public welfare.

We hear a lot about the "vagrant cur"; but the cur and the cultured pup are both dog in nature and act, they commit the same deeds; there are tooo many of each class.

Look at the brazen effrontery of a writer recently, claiming the right to be a public nuisance (because he paid one dollar tax. Why, the property his dog destroyed is also taxed, probably more than one dollar.

The council has no right to permit a nuisance for any consideration; tax is for privilege, not for plunder or imposition. It would be a decided improvement to make the tax $5.00 instead of $1.00

It is the duty of the council to make this law a success, not a farce, and they need not fear any of these dire threats at the polls.

We have borne long and patiently this nuisance, and citizens will appreciate a much needed relief.

Yours truly,
CITIZEN.

COMPANY TO LOWER WATER

Peterborough Light and Power Company to Assist in Bettering Conditions at New Bridge

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—The city council has asked us to lower the water above our dam in order that the contractor building the Smith street bridge may proceed with the work to better advantage. We have explained to the whole council that it is impossible for us to lower the head at the present time, without interfering with our power customers. However, the council thought that the citizens generally would be willing to suffer some inconvenience for a couple of weeks in order that this work may be proceeded with, consequently we have consented to lower the water on our dam for two weeks from Monday, the 11th. There is an exceptionally large flow of water coming down the river at present, and on this account the water backs up on our wheels and reduces our head, making it more difficult for us to operate. If we lower the head above the dam we are afraid we will not be able to produce sufficient power, with the wheels we have at present, to take care of our full load and it may be necessary to cut off all the residence lighting and the lighting on George street during the day time. We have arranged with the Quaker Oats Co. to use considerably less power during the time the water is lowered and we trust the customers of the Peterborough Light and Power Company will also bear with us, and realize that the reason they are not getting as good service as usual is due to the fact that we are trying to help out the city council. It is possible that the flow of the river may decrease before next week in which case it may not be necessary to shut off the lightning as mentioned above. We hope to be able to carry all the factories and will do everything possible to also give our usual lighting service during these two weeks.

Yours truly,

PROVISIONAL SCHEDULE FOR MIDLAND LEAGUE

At a meeting held in the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday afternoon the schedule for the season was provisionally adopted. There may be some changes in the draft adopted, but at present it looks as if there would be five districts with the three Peterboroughs clubs the Brintons, Canadian General Electric Company team and the Peterboroughs grouped together in district No. 3. Such an arrangement would be greatly in the interests of the game as there would be no travelling expenses and the rivalry engendered by having three local teams clashing would boom the soccer article in the city.

DISTRICT ONE.
May 7—Bowmanville at Oshawa.
May 14—Oshawa at Bowmanville.
May 21—Bowmanville at Oshawa.
May 24—Oshawa at Bowmanville.

Claims Big Damages.

Smith's Falls, April 11.—George E. Peacock, a former employe of the Frost & Wood office here, has brought an action against J. E. Ruby, general manager of the Frost & Wood Co.; H. Cockshutt, managing director of the Cockshutt Plow Co., Brantford, and Lloyd Harris, M.P., president of the Canada Bolt & Nut Co. The claim is for $20,000 damages for an alleged unlawful conspiracy on the part of the defendants to induce the Toronto Bolt & Forging Co. and other employers not to employ him, thereby depriving him of his means of livelihood.

English Spinners to Reduce Wages.

Manchester, Eng., April 11.—The master cotton spinners' federation has voted in favor of a five per cent. reduction in the wages of operatives, and have called a joint meeting of employers and operatives to discuss the matter. The step was taken owing to the depression in the cotton trade. It is believed that the operatives will strongly resent the proposition.

Witte Offended Kuropatkin.

St. Petersburg, April 11.—A duel between former Premier Count Witte and Gen. Kuropatkin, former commander-in-chief of the Russian forces in the field, has been averted through an explanation by the former. Kuropatkin took offence at a speech in which Count Witte asserted that the modern Russian military commanders were lacking in moral courage.

Sent Snakes to Girl He Loved.

Manchester, N.H., April 10.—Two wriggling adders, each nearly 24 inches long, formed the contents of a paper box, which Michael Hasselbar, 22 years old, confided to Miss Alice Stuart of 129 Lake avenue, with a request to give it to her chum, Miss Rosie Cabana, 18 years old, who had spurned his ardent advances.

The Flight From Free Trade.

London, April 11.—E. Adair, Vancouver, is conveying 120 emigrants to Winnipeg, 75 of whom possess an aggregate of £300,000. The tariff reform press is daily devoting columns to the emigration rush from Liverpool, which they describe as a "flight from free trade."

AN AERIAL FLIGHT.

Up to Date Romance In Which a Flying Machine Plays a Part.

By IRA TEN BROECK.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"But, Jack, dear, I wouldn't dare," chattered Molly in a flutter of excitement.

"Yes, you will, Molly," answered Jack Wyster impulsively.

"Just think of the novelty of an elopement in a flying machine. The Eagle is in tiptop shape, and there isn't a bit of danger, so make up your mind to go this afternoon. Be at the shed at 2 o'clock, dear. Goodby!" Kissing her playfully, he ran down the steps and in the direction of the field where he had been trying out a new aeroplane.

Molly Windon smothered an impulse to call him back and tell her headstrong lover that she could not go with him, but she hesitated, and in that instant Jack disappeared around the house. She sighed deeply to quiet her excited nerves and fell back languidly into the hammock. The very audacity of the idea frightened her. Certainly, she loved Jack, but couldn't he find a safer way to run off to get married? To be sure, Colonel Windon, who was aware of the infatuation of his daughter for the young aeronaut, would be on his guard if he detected them going away together, while he would never suspect Jack's novel ruse. They were to ascend in the Eagle, cross the river to Rossmere, then jump into Jack's auto and run down to Terryville, where Will Boynton, his chum, would await them with a minister.

Molly was so nervous at luncheon that the colonel's curiosity was aroused, and he questioned her closely—so closely, indeed, that once or twice in her excitement she burst out into a hysterical laugh. Immediately afterward she excused herself on the plea of taking a nap and retired to her room to prepare for her journey. But the colonel's suspicions were now aroused, and the old gentleman took a position on the veranda, with a newspaper, to await developments.

He had not been on the veranda long when his attention was attracted by the creaking of the side door, and he saw his daughter gliding furtively over the lawn, dressed in auto togs, in the direction of the trial field. Quietly he went into the house for his coat and followed her.

In a very few moments Molly arrived at the shed where Wyster's aeroplane was quartered. True to his word, Jack had everything in readiness for the escape and at once seated her in the frame, strapping her in securely. Both were so excited inwardly that they spoke only in monosyllables, while Jack prepared for the ascent with the methodical care of the trained aviator. Within a minute of the time Helen was seated the motor was throbbing, and the machine began to glide faster and faster over the field. Suddenly the earth seemed to fall, and she knew that they were rising. For a moment she closed her eyes and clung tightly to the narrow framework, but the exhilarating sensation of flying went into her head, and the madness of it all made her laugh in spite of her fear. Gathering courage, she looked down, and far below she saw her home as the machine circled over the field and soared toward the river. Suddenly her eyes were arrested by a figure in white running frantically from the field toward the boathouse. Jack saw it about the same time, and as he opened the throttle of the motor he shouted to her. All she could hear in the growing roar of wind was the word "colonel," but she caught his meaning. Windon was making for the river, and in a few moments the Comet, the colonel's racing launch, emerged from the boathouse. The colonel had divined their purpose and was endeavoring to reach the opposite shore before they could descend and escape.

By this time they were nearing the trees on the far side of the river, and Jack glanced at her reassuringly. The Comet was only halfway across the stream. Right ahead of them appeared a large field, and she could feel the machine falling as Jack worked at the levers and shut down the motor. Gliding slowly downward, they struck with a slight jar and ran on a few rods before stopping. Some one came running across the field. It was Tom, Jack's chauffeur.

Abandoning the Eagle, they raced across the field and climbed into the auto, and as the chauffeur threw in the high speed gear they shot down the road through the little village of Rossmere. Such a ride as it was! Molly wondered where the road officers were, but she did not see one or two who stepped into the road, waving their arms in a futile endeavor to stop the speeding machine. The last house of the village shot by, a streak of white, and with an added roar the big fifty shot out into the open country. The machine rode the hills like a bird. Luckily the road was clear, and Tom opened the throttle wide. It was glorious, maddening, thought Molly, holding tightly to her lover. Suddenly she heard a sharp report, and the car slowed down in obedience to the brakes. "Blowout!" shouted Tom as he brought it to a stop, and in an instant he and Wyster were out on the road stripping off the tire and putting on a new one. As they worked over the wheel Molly glanced back, and what she saw made her leap to her feet excitedly. "Jack!" she cried. "Hurry! Quick! Father is coming."

When Molly thought over the events that followed she resembled them to a moving picture exhibition with a nervous operator at the film. Jack and Tom literally jumped into the car, and Tom threw on the current, but the engines didn't even cough. As Tom leaped out to the crank Jack looked back, and there, not a quarter of a mile away, came the other machine, and the colonel was standing, waving his arm. In a second, however, Tom was again at the wheel, and the auto shot down the road.

In spite of Tom's best efforts the pursuing car gained steadily. Jack was almost wild with intense excitement. "Coax her, Tom!" he pleaded. "Coax her!" But it was of no avail. The colonel by this time was plainly visible in his white flannels, and Jack fairly groaned.

As usual, the unexpected happened. Something went wrong with the motor of the pursuing car, and Jack hugged his sweetheart in glee as he looked back and saw it stop, while the chauffeur leaped out and raised the hood. In a few seconds they were out of sight around a bend in the road.

Both Jack and Molly gave a great sigh of relief as they rounded the curve and the houses on the outskirts of Terryville came in view. Once or twice they narrowly escaped colliding with wagons, but in a few moments the machine slowed down and ran into a side street, coming to a stop in front of a modest little cottage. Will Boynton ran out to meet them.

"All ready, old chap," he said, "so step lively!" He almost hugged Molly as he helped her from the car, while Jack directed Tom what to do with the machine. "Come right in like sheep to the slaughter. The parson's waiting for you!"

As she entered the gate the seriousness of the step she was about to take came to Molly's mind for the first time. She felt inclined to run away, to hide, to think it over. She felt a pang of sorrow for the colonel. How kind he had been to her! How thoughtful always of her wishes! A lump rose in her throat as she thought how ungrateful she was to leave him thus. Perhaps Wyster understood, or perhaps the serious end of the affair came also to his mind, as he touched her arm tenderly and said: "Come, dear. We've gone this far, and the colonel is apt to be here any minute, you know." With a sigh she walked into the neat little yard and followed Boynton to the door of the parsonage.

The minister met them at the door, and Boynton introduced them. They were ushered into the little parlor, with its musty air and quaint decorations, and before she fully realized it Molly was standing before the minister with Jack repeating the marriage vows. As the words were pronounced that made them man and wife there was a commotion at the door, and Colonel Windon rushed in.

"You—you rascal!" he sputtered. "You ingrate! You thievin' man hawk! You confounded"—

"Sir!" said Wyster, stepping forward, while Molly clung to his arm as if to restrain him.

The colonel waved him back. "What do you mean, you young rascals, by sneakin' off in this 'ere manner anyway!" He stopped for breath and mopped his face with a capacious handkerchief. "What do you mean, sir? Here I've fetched up my daughter for nineteen years, an' bless my soul if she don't run away without sayin' so much as 'by your leave.' Didn't even invite me to see her married after"—

"What!" said Wyster. "You mean"—

"Yes," puffed the colonel; "I mean I've chased you young scamps twenty miles to attend your wedding, and you wouldn't wait long enough to let me give my girl away. But," he continued, advancing toward them, "I shall have satisfaction. Confound me, but I shall!"

Molly caught a glimmer of a smile in her father's eye, and it gave her courage to speak.

"Father, dear, will you forgive us? I'm sorry if I've been ungrateful toward you, but I'm glad, too, because I have Jack. Will you forgive your little girl if she promises never, never, to do it again?"

"I'll promise that, too, if you will, colonel," said Jack. Windon's face was a puzzle. To look at it one would not know whether he was angry or happy, chagrined or amused.

"Well," he said after a pause, "seeing that you have gone and done it, I suppose I may as well resign myself to a son-in-law."

BOYS AND GIRLS

THE FAIRY DETECTIVE

BY RUPERT HUGHES

The Prince Who Was a Policeman

THE little girl was toddling through the big park with her fat nurse. On a tall old tree she saw a funny bunch that looked like a small fur muff. So she said:—

"Looky at the squirrel! If I only had a bag of peanuts!"

Now a child should never go into a park without a bag of peanuts any more than a man should go into a sleeping car without some small change for the porter. In fact, giving peanuts to squirrels is only one way of tipping them for being polite and letting you walk through their park.

But here was a little girl wandering through Squirrel City without a peanut to her name and no Italian in sight anywhere. So she felt much ashamed and rebuked the nurse severely.

The nurse, whose name was Mlle. Bridget O'Rourke, said:—

"I promise you this is the last time this will ever happen again."

The little girl tried to whistle, but her mouth wasn't tuned yet.

"I wish I could make a noise like a bag of peanuts," she said, "then he'd come."

But she couldn't, and he didn't.

"I 'spose I'll have to bribe him with something—I wonder what." She decided that the nurse's watch was the brightest looking object in the neighborhood. So she borrowed it and stooped down and held it out as if it were a ginger snap.

Then Mr. Squirrel stuck out his head and his whole body till he hung sidewise on the tree like a Japanese acrobat. Then he scolded and chittered, using squirrel language. Then he ran down the tree, then up again, then down again, then out on the snow a little, then back, then out again, then a little to the south, then a little to the north; then he sat up and folded his arms as much as to say:—

"I wonder what you're up to."

Then he came forward, then he went back, then he sat up again, his tail hung over his shoulders like a feather boa, and his nose shivering as if he had a special chill in the tip of it.

"He won't come any closeter," the little girl said. "I think I'll just throw the watch over toward him."

"I think you won't," said the nurse. "It a my watch."

So the little girl had to wait till Mr. Squirrel was tired of his nigzag, and, finally growing reckless, came quite close, ran up the little girl's knee and out on her arm. She held her breath and watched him take the watch in both hands and sniff it. He saw it was nothing to eat and started to run, then paused and listened. The watch ticked just about as fast as his nose twinkled. He looked at the face of the watch a moment and suddenly exclaimed:—

"Petrified peanuts! It's twenty minutes past three! If I don't scoot I'll be late to my engagement."

The little girl was so much surprised to hear a squirrel talk and tell the time and have engagements that she sat down hard on the hard walk. The squirrel made a leap, but she caught him by the tail and he remarked:—

"Ouch!"

"I agree with you," said the little girl, making a sorry face.

The squirrel said anxiously, "For tree-top's sake, don't detain me. I'm very punctilious and this is an important business engagement."

The little girl only held on the tighter and said:—

"I don't know what punch-tilly-whatever-you-said is, but I know you are not no squirrel. What are you? Who are you?"

"Squirrel! Me a squirrel? I should my not. This is only a disguise."

"You are only a disguise?" the little girl said.

"No. I have on a disguise."

"Oh!"

"You see, I'm a detective. I have a badge somewhere—it is on my other clothes, I think."

"Your other clothes! Nurse, do you hear that?"

Nurse was all eyes and ears. She said:—

"The only other time I was after hearing a squirrel talk English it was a parrot, and he spoke Eyetalian."

But the little girl wasn't listening to her; she was staring at the squirrel, who was saying:—

"And now, if you will be so kind as to return my tail I'll be hurrying on. I wouldn't stop for a little thing like a tail except that a squirrel would look funny without one, and I'd probably catch cold. Besides, it's a kind of balancing pole when I run along a branch, and it's a kind of rudder when I'm going round a curve. I found it pretty hard to manage, though, at first. So please let me go. I don't want to have to bite you; it's impolite."

"Besides," said Bridget, "squirrels don't eat meat, except it's the meat of a nut."

But the little girl hung on tight and said, "Before I let go you must tell me who you are when you are not a disguise."

"Why, when I'm myself I'm a gentleman elf."

"An elf!" whispered the little girl. "I've often heard of 'em, but you are the first I ever saw."

"And what is an elluf?" said Bridget. "Is it a little ellefant?"

"Shame on you, nurse, for your ignorance," said the little girl; "an elf is a kind of fairy."

"Then let it go at once," said the nurse. "We have them in Ireland, and they are always doing harm, except when they are doing good."

"Don't be afraid," said the squirrel in a grandfatherly voice. "I'm a very well

"We'll sit here and be comfable." So she seated herself on a park bench and the squirrel seated himself on her knee. He coughed once or twice and curled his mustaches and began:—

"You see, a great crime has been committed in the land of Sciura."

"And where's that?"

"That's the same of squirrel land. A squirrel calls himself a Sciurus, so his country is called Sciura."

"In the land of Sciura, it is the custom of the inhabitants to work during the summer and take their vacation in the winter."

"Just like human beings, only the other way," observed Bridget.

Won't you keep your nurse quiet? How is the name of horrified huckleberries can tell my story with so many interrup-

"Excuse me," said Bridget, "I wasn't talking. I was just thinking out loud."

"Well, think a little softer, please. As I was trying to say, the squirrels depend in the winter on what they earn in the summer like people who keep a hotel on the beach. Now, supposing you were a squirrel—"

"But how could she be a squirrel when she's a girrul?"

"Oh, weary walnuts! Supposing you were a squirrel and the head of a large family of foolish little squirrels, and you've worked hard all summer saving up nice nuts in a safe storage warehouse and denying yourself things when they're tempting and going to bed hungry, and all summer you work like that and"——

"Suffering shamrocks!" gasped Bridget, "isn't there going to be any end to that itions? But, as I was saying, and you must have noticed, the squirrel folk work hard all summer storing up nuts for the winter; in the winter they only eat and sleep."

"That's an easier job than mine," said Bridget, with a sigh, "only the pay is small, and the food is kind of monotonous. Not eating meat all winter, every day would seem like Friday."

"Helpless hazelnuts, are you telling this story, madam, or am I?" shouted the squirrel.

speech except the front end, where you began?"

"Don't stop me," said the squirrel, "or I'll get hurt. Supposing all that, and you loved your family, and you feel all comfortable and safe about the winter and because you had so much money in the bank—I mean nuts in the nuttery—and then just as the first frost comes and the snow fell, and you should look out and the ground had been all covered with cotton so deep it will be over your head, and no steam is turned on in your tree, and you went to the nuttery to draw out enough for breakfast—supposing then that you found every single nut gone—the whole place robbed and looted—supposing all that, what would you think if you were a squirrel?"

"That's a good deal of supposing for one day," said the little girl, "but I 'spose I'd prob'ly cry and cry and then go for a policeman."

"But there aren't any policemen in Sciura."

"Then I guess I'd just cry and starve to death."

"Well, wouldn't you appeal to the elves?"

"I'd never have thought of that."

"Always remember that Heaven helps those that are helped by the elves. Anyway, that's what this poor woman did. She was a widow squirrel, named Mrs. Brindlecoat. Her husband was run over by an automobile, leaving her with a large and stupid family. When she saw herself robbed she first had a good cry, then she accused everybody she met; then, when that did no good, she appealed to the elves. My father, the King, put the elf detectives and police on the track, but of course they couldn't find out anything."

"At last the poor Brindlecoat family was driven to begging for peanuts on the sidewalk. And then my father said for me to take up the case. I've always had a knack for detective work, and so I left my comfortable quarters in the palace, squeezed into this disguise, and now I'm a pretend squirrel."

"So that's how a prince comes to be a policeman. And have you found any clew?" said the little girl.

"I've found a lot of clews, but they don't lead anywhere. Now I'm on the track of a new one. I'm shadowing a very suspicious character—look. There he goes now!"

"Where?"

"See that tough looking squirrel with one ear chewed off and a red coat that looks as if the moths had been in it and a tail that is bald in spots?"

"Yes, I see him; is he the guilty one?" gasped the little girl, greatly excited.

"I can't tell yet, but I'm close on his tail—I mean trail. He's what we call a scamp squirrel—always in trouble at ways spatting other squirrels or birds or groundsnake. He toadies to his betters and bullies his littlers. If you'll come back here to-morrow or next week I may have great news to report. And now—there he goes!—I must follow him. You really must excuse me."

He made a flying leap before the little girl could catch him. Bridget sprawled over the bench to get at him, but he was too spry. He paused at a safe distance, put one paw up to his mouth and called out in a loud whisper:—

"Be here to-morrow about this time. Goodby. So long!"

And he was away.

The little girl looked at the nurse and the nurse looked at the little girl. After a long stare the little girl said:—

"He never told me his name and he never asked me mine!"

"Then," said Bridget, "you ought to know each other when next you meet. We'd better be getting home."

As they started along the path the little girl said:—"I wonder if this is all a dream. I'm so afraid that I'll wake up and find myself in bed or on the floor."

"We'll come back to-morrow," said Bridget, "and if we're awake then we'll know that we're not asleep to-day."

Pattern (actual size) of Back and Seat of Chair, To Be Folded on Dotted Line.

FURNITURE for the paper doll family can easily be made of cardboard boxes by any girl who will take the pains to cut out the parts of each piece carefully according to the pattern shown in the picture and to glue or paste them together neatly. The principal point to be careful about is the accurate cutting of each piece so that the two sides of any article of furniture will be alike.

It is first necessary to collect pasteboard boxes of the proper size and shape. This will not be difficult, because in any household there are nowadays so many boxes which come in continually from the grocery store, the dry goods store and the drug store that in a short time you are sure to come across a box which suits your purpose absolutely.

In the illustrations figures are placed showing the size of all the boxes to be used for making a set of furniture suitable for the ordinary paper doll. But if you desire to make a larger set it is only necessary to procure boxes twice the size of those designated in the picture. If you have no boxes of the required size and do not care to wait until you come upon some you can make boxes of just the size you want from cardboard or from larger boxes. To do this the best way is to take a piece of cardboard large enough to make all four sides of a box of the required size. Draw straight lines with the aid of a ruler at the points which are to form the corners of the box and then run a penknife lightly over these lines, so as to cut the cardboard slightly, but not all the way through. Then bend the cardboard on these lines and fasten the two ends together with a straight strip of muslin, pasted partly on each end. You will then have four sides of a box. If you need the bottom also you simply paste this in with four strips of muslin fastened on the inside.

The easiest way, however, is to get a box which is the right size in the beginning. If a box is too deep it is very easy, of course, to cut it off to the required depth. If it is too long, but the proper width, you may cut off one end and then paste the end piece on again.

Suppose, then, you have a box three by two inches by three inches deep or in these proportions. This will make a very nice table. Take off the lid and turn the box upside down. Then cut out the sides, as shown in the pictures, leaving a little way up from the floor. Then cut an oval piece of cardboard four inches by five and paste this on top of the box so that it comes out at least an inch beyond the top of the box all around the edge. The table is then finished. If your box is brown, gray or white it will do nicely as it is. If it is a color that you do not care for you can cover it with wood brown paper before you begin to make the table. Colored furniture, however, even pink and blue, is perfectly suitable for the paper dolls' house.

The chair is in two pieces. One piece forms the back and seat of the chair, while the lower part is cut from a box which is one and three-quarters inches square and two inches deep. The box is turned upside down and cut out as shown in the illustration. The back and seat are made from the pattern given. This pattern is the correct size and may be laid on the cardboard, which may be cut out accordingly. The dotted line shows where to bend the cardboard to form the seat. Paste the seat to the bottom of the box. In order to make the back hold up firmly paste a strip of cardboard or heavy paper across the back at the point shown. The nail heads in the seat are made with crayon or the centre piece of the seat may be water colored or crayoned in a different color.

The settee is made of a box longer than it is wide, the dimensions being nine inches long by three inches wide and four inches deep. You may probably find difficulty in getting a box just this size. If a box is much deeper you can cut it off to the required depth. If it is an inch longer or shorter it will not matter, but if the width is not right you will have to correct it by taking off the proper width and putting the front back again, pasting the two ends with strips of muslin inside the corners.

When you have the box the right size the four sides are used for the four sides of the settee. You may leave the bottom of the box in if you like, as it will make the piece of furniture stronger, the upper side of the box forms the back of the seat. This is already the proper height. It is only necessary to cut or draw the pattern out as shown in the illustration. The two arms are the end pieces of the box. Cut these down about one-third of the distance from the top of the settee to the floor. A pattern may be cut in simply drawn on with crayons.

The front piece is a little more than a third lower than the arms.

The box lid forms the seat. As shown in the illustration, three sides of the top of the lid are cut off and the other is left. This remaining rim is pasted to the back of the settee, as shown in the picture, and the front edge of the seat then rests on the front of the lower part. Cushions may be made of newspaper folded and cut to fit and covered with flowered or

GOLD FOUND IN OLD BRICKS.

Walls of Mexican Adobe Houses Yield Treasure for the Men Who Know.

There are many remarkable towns in Mexico, but none more interesting than Guanajuato, "The Hill of the Frog." It might more properly be called the "gold brick town," for the houses have been found to contain much gold.

This is a curious situation, but it came about naturally. Guanajuato—pronounced Wah-nah-wahto—is one of the oldest mining towns in Mexico but the value of the place as a town was discovered when a railroad company decided to build a station there. It was found necessary to tear down about 200 adobe buildings, which were made of the refuse of various mines after the ore was extracted.

When it became known that the old adobe buildings would be torn down pieces taken at random were assayed. It was found that because of the old process, which lost much gold and silver, they assayed from $3 to $20 a ton. The mean value was estimated to run about eight dollars gold a ton.

The old buildings have brought about $30,000 Mexican in gold, and persons who have built since the new machinery has been installed in the mines are bemoaning the fact that the new houses do not contain as much gold as the old.—Scientific American.

New Method of Keeping Potatoes.

A German publication, "The Practical Advisor in Fruit Raising and Gardening," states that a new method for keeping potatoes and prevent sprouting consists in placing them a layer of coke. Dr. Schib wick, who has published is of the opinion that the improved ventilation by means of coke is not alone responsible for the result, but believes that it is due to the oxidation of the coke, which, however, is a very slow one. Coke always contains sulphur, and it is very possible that the minute quantities of oxides of carbon and sulphur, which result from the oxidation, mixing with the air and penetrating among the potatoes are sufficient to greatly retard sprouting. Potatoes so treated are said to keep in good condition until the following July.

The Revealing Vision.

Long ago in the days when our caged blackbirds never saw a king's soldier without whistling impudently "Come over the water to Charlie," a minister of Thrums was to be married, but something happened and he remained a bachelor. Then, when he was old, he passed in our square the lady who was to have been his wife, and her hair was white, but she, too, was still unmarried. The meeting had only one witness, a weaver, and he said, solemnly, afterwards: "They dinna speak, but they just gave one another a look and I saw the love-light in their een." No more is remembered of these two, no being now living ever saw them, but the poetry that was in the soul of a battered weaver makes them human to us forever.—J. M. Barrie.

Why Women Grow Prematurely Old.

Women, condemned to the steam-heated life of our American cities, fed on the too abundant meat diet, which is our boast, breathing and sleeping wrongly, suffering the lack of physical exercise, which oddly enough, is the result of our so-called "busy" life—continue to age and to lose suppleness, grace, vigor and natural charm, writes Kate Masterson, in Collier's. All the wonder-working grease and bleaching acids in the world will not do more than achieve a surface smoothness.

WINTRY ASPECT OF THE WEATHER

Peterborough People Were Surprised to See Snow This Morning

Weather conditions this morning gave Peterborough people a shock like a man feels when a piece of ice is dropped down his back inside his collar. Last night the stars shone brightly and fair weather for the morrow seemed in view. This morning, however, the ground was covered with snow and the amount was being increased by an unusually heavy downfall. It slackened towards noon and the sun came out dimly and started the snow to melt. The streets are in bad condition, but a few warm, dry days will put them in good shape again.

Farmers state that the snow will do no damage in the country.

Carlaw's flour mills in Belleville were destroyed by fire.

Two new battleships, costing $6,000,000 each, have been authorized by the U.S. House.

Woman's World

A CORSET STRIKE.

The Meat Boycott In Line For Substantial Re-enforcement.

A corset strike may engage the attention of the women after they have finished with the meat strike, for it is now considered "queenly" to go without the expensive and uncomfortable adornments, according to recent information.

Besides, stylish corsets are getting so long it is unpleasant to walk in them. Any girl will tell you that. And the longer they make them the more they cost. Any married man can tell you that the high cost of corsets has kept pace with the high cost of living.

But the main thing just now is that Queen Elizabeth of Roumania has concluded a triple alliance against the corsets. Three queens are hard to beat. In addition to Queen Elizabeth, there are Queen Alexandra of England and Queen Helena of Italy. All are bona fide queens, who can wear what they please and afford to pay for it and have a vast burden of court etiquette to manage.

Queen Elizabeth told her court all about it a day or two ago. She received a letter from Queen Alexandra saying the latter had decided that a woman's dress should follow her natural lines. Even if these lines are inartistic, that is no reason why a woman should endanger her health and posterity, says the queen.

The corset, opines Queen Alexandra, does not carry out the idea of natural lines in dress. On the other hand, it thwarts such an idea and gives the body a sort of a nom de plume. It is a fraud, often a snare and delusion, and Queen Alexandra was anxious that her disapproval be published to the world.

It was this attitude of Queen Alexandra, according to Queen Elizabeth, that caused the former to invent the princess idea of dress, for which many shapely women are so thankful.

"Her majesty of England," went on Queen Elizabeth to her courtiers, "despises blouses, maintaining that the subdivision of the female body by the blouse and skirt is unbeautiful if not a downright sacrilege."

So Queen Elizabeth indorsed Queen Alexandra and then proclaimed some views of her own.

"The corset," she declared, "is an invention of man, not of woman. Most men judge a woman's beauty according to the standard of an expensive corset maker."

Queen Elizabeth forthwith wrote a pamphlet setting down her reflections on the subject and is having it circulated all over Roumania.

It was then that the queen of Italy became a part of the triple alliance. She gave away all her corsets—one for every gown—and wrote to Queen Elizabeth as follows:

"I am opposed to the corset on principle, because I think it unhygienic and directly injurious to women, particularly to mothers. Women who have studied the functions of the body will refuse to wear corsets. Only thoughtless mothers will imitate the habits of women still more giddy and allow their bodies to be squeezed tightly and their organs to be distorted."

SUCCESS IN SMILES.

School In Paris to Teach Unknowing How to Wield Facial Weapon.

We often win success with the weapon of a smile. The road to a man's heart and to a woman's fortune sometimes lies in the light of a smile. A new cult teaches that one has only to sit up and look pleasant to obtain pretty much everything worth while possessing in life. Health and happiness, which elude the utmost endeavors of many of us to hold in thrall, we are assured may be won and kept by a smile.

Advancement in business is measured by the quality and variety of our smiles. A fellow being can be cheered to living and one may prolong his own life by merely smiling. These and many other facts are brought out relative to a school for smiling established in Paris.

The Frenchwoman is nothing if not practical. If took a Frenchwoman to reduce to a practical science, with a commercial value, the gentle art of smiling. There is much to learn about this pleasing little contortion of visage. A grin is not synonymous with a smile, nor does a simper rank in the same category or convey the same meaning. A widening of the mouth has not the significance one seeks in a smile, and laughter is a thing often associated with but distinct from it. One is an irresistible expression of excited risibles—the irrepressible overflow of mirth—or a vocalization of anger, irony or contempt. It is a product of the emotions. The other is more deeply seated in the feelings and when spontaneous more certainly serves as an index to character. It is not always spontaneous. Alas, it may never be so again!

The school for smiling consciously instructs in methods of producing smiles adapted to all purposes and suitable for every occasion. Unconsciously perhaps it inculcates deception and upon necessity in the smile of its graduates deceit is as likely to lurk as mirth, tenderness, pleasure or sympathy. The dimpled irradiation which betokens a gay, untroubled mind has almost the charm of the smile that belongs to happiness, and both are invariably the possession of youth. Older people are wont to take their joys more soberly, unaware that the outward and visible sign of a smile is as necessary to their well being as sunshine is to that of a flower. There are organisms which can exist only in the light. Within us are organisms whose presence is necessary to health. These need the illumination of a smile and the exercise of laughter to keep them in healthy condition.

Tea Biscuits.

One quart of flour, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of sugar, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one tablespoonful of lard, one pint of sweet milk or water—water makes them more tender than milk. Sift together the flour, salt, sugar and baking powder. Rub in the lard cold. Add milk or water to form into a soft dough as can be handled. Flour the board and roll out, cut with a small tin cutter and bake in a good hot oven twenty minutes.

An Art Criticism.

An American painter, says a writer in Everybody's Magazine, once met an art editor, who insisted on dragging him up to an exhibition of some "very impressionistic" pictures. The editor evidently admired them greatly. Not so the painter.

"You don't seem enthusiastic," said the editor. "Don't you like them?"

"Like 'em?" replied the other. "Why, man, I've got two maiden aunts who can knit better pictures than those."

A Guessing Game.

Bring a piece of ribbon into a room and get your guests to guess its length. A piece of, say, two yards and two inches will puzzle most folk. Or get an earthenware basin of beans or peas and get those assembled to guess the weight or to guess how many peas or beans the basin contains.

COMING IN EN MASSE

Rush of Immigrants Into the Canadian West is Remarkable.

Winnipeg, April 12.—Never in the history of Canada have there been such sights witnessed at any Canadian port of entry as are seen daily at Portal, where a vast throng of American emigrants are crowding into Canada. Sunday three train-loads of effects, comprising sixty cars, came in, which is just about the average of each day. Accompanying these were 250 settlers en route to their homesteads. Included in their effects were eleven hundred horses and a large number of cattle. During March six thousand colonists came in, and at least eight thousand more will come during the present month. The great difficulty which the settlers have had through the absolute lack of water has been solved by the C.P.R. taking in a trainload of water daily to supply the stock.

The officials of the railways and the Immigration Department estimate that if there is a good crop this year, next season more people will come in through Portal alone from the United States than came in through all the ports in 1909.

PRIVACY FOR CONVICTS AT GUELPH FARM

Guelph, April 12.—The first contingent of twenty convicts were transferred yesterday from the Central Prison Toronto, to the site of the new provincial reformatory, near here. They were accompanied by Warden Gilmour and some other officials. Those brought up are "trustees" out on parole. They will be quartered in some of the buildings already on the grounds.

Jos. Downey, M.P.P., waxed wrathy with a Guelph newspaper man here yesterday, when the latter intimated that he had received a telegram from a Toronto paper, asking for details about the first contingent of convicts to arrive.

"Absurd, preposterous, shameful, unscrupulous," were words in which the local member, himself an old newspaper man, described his opinion of the newspaper, or the reporter, who might even think of publishing anything about the convicts who are being put to work on the farm.

"If any newspaper man attempts to take pictures of these convicts at work he will have his camera smashed for his pains," went on Mr. Downey. "They are to be protected from the eyes of the curious just as though they worked behind stone walls."

PIANO AGENT IS IN TROUBLE

Brockville, April 12.—In the Police Court yesterday George L. Riches faced the charge of converting to his own use money belonging to the Karn and Morris Piano & Organ Co. of Woodstock. Riches recently failed in business and the Karn Company, which he represented in Brockville, found customers who produced receipts for instruments on which small remittances had been made to them as rentals. There is a reported shortage of between $4,000 and $5,000.

Riches could not furnish two bondsmen for $500 each and was remanded for eight days.

THE GAEKWAR IS COMING AGAIN

Washington, D.C., April 12.—Word was received yesterday that the Gaekwar of Baroda had left Bombay, Indiar, March 30, for a tour of Canada and the United States. He is accompanied by the maharanee.

The wealthy Indian prince was the object of much attention and interest in the United States, and in Toronto, Montreal and other Canadian cities which he visited while making his last trip, about five years ago.

AETNA'S DUST IN THE INDIES

New York, April 12.—Clouds of fine volcanic dust are floating over West Indian waters, which Capt. Dickinson and crew of the steamship Avon, in yesterday from the West Indies, believe came from the eruption of Mount Aetna and were blown over the Atlantic.

An area of discolored water indicating a disturbance on the sea bottom, was recorded on the log of the steamer Pola, which arrived yesterday from Huelva, Spain, on March 28, in latitude 37.42, longitude 24.11.

SAVED WOMAN IN FRONT OF TRAIN

Woodstock, April 12.—The spectacle of a deaf woman, Mrs. C. McGinnis, walking unconcernedly ahead of a C.P.R. freight train which was desperately trying to stop, gave William Elliott, jr., a chance to display his presence of mind.

It was such a close call that Elliott's sleeve as he pulled the woman away was brushed by the engine which was brought to a standstill fifty feet further on.

ANOTHER VICTIM OF LEVEL CROSSING

Frank Watson, of Campbellville, is Killed by Train.

Guelph, April 12.—Caught at a level crossing over which he was driving a team and wagon, Frank Watson of Campbellville was instantly killed at Guelph Junction, 15 miles from the city.

The horses took fright at the approaching train and, becoming unmanageable, took young Watson off the track. One horse was killed; the other was unhurt.

The pilot of the engine struck the front wheels of the wagon, smashing it to pieces, and throwing the occupant several yards ahead, where he fell to one side of the track. The train stopped immediately, and the crew did all that was possible for the victime of the accident. They telephoned from Guelph Junction station for Dr. Carbert of Campbellville, who hurried to the scene only to find all signs of life extinct.

Coroner McCard of Milton was called, and after examining the body and the wreckage and getting the evidence of a few eye-witnesses he decided that death had been caused by the collision and that an inquest was unnecessary.

The remains were taken in the young man's home. One of the horses was killed and the other injured. The funeral took place at Campbellville yesterday afternoon. Frank Watson was a popular young man. He was between twenty and twenty-five years of age and was unmarried, living at home with his parents.

CAPT. TATLOW IS DEAD AT VANCOUVER

Vancouver, B.C., April 12.—Hon. Robt. G. Tatlow, formerly in the McBride Cabinet, who was thrown from his rig on Friday afternoon, striking his head on the stone pavement, died yesterday morning, not having regained consciousness.

He was an Irishman, 55 years of age. Educated in England, he came to the coast many years ago. In 1894, he was an unsuccessful candidate for the legislature, but in 1900, was elected and in subsequent contests. In 1903 he was appointed Minister of Finance and Agriculture.

Prior to last election, he resigned from the Government, owing to differences over the C.N.R. deal.

H. H. MILLER GOES AFTER THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Father of the Anti-Racing Bill Declares That Minister of Justice Pretended to Make the Bill Criticism-Proof and Then Attacked it.

Ottawa, April 12.—H. H. Miller, in the House of Commons yesterday, referring to a complaint from Hon. A. B. Aylesworth that he had made public a communication as to the anti-betting bill, said:

"When I asked the Minister for his legal opinion, surely the letter I received in reply, not being marked personal or confidential, was a letter that one might expect could be made public. I would ask if the opinion of the Minister of Justice, when requested by a member of the House, are to be treated as private correspondence, of what value is that opinion?

"I do say that if I had used the Minister of Justice as he has used me in this matter I would have thought I had struck below the belt, and that I had not acted either honestly or honorably."

Mr. Aylesworth in reply said he had had no idea "of imputing any dishonorable conduct," but that he had never expected that this "friendly conversation" would have been a matter of public discussion afterwards in any public form.

"I did not consider, and I do not consider now—that because I happened to be Minister of Justice I am in any way legal adviser for the House as a whole, or for any member of the House," said Mr. Aylesworth.

Mr. Miller had something more to say of the Minister's objections to the private betting restrictions.

"I said to the Minister of Justice," declared Mr. Miller, "'If this bill, in your opinion, would affect the man who makes a private bet, I would like you to suggest any language that you can suggest that would leave out the private bettor and exempt him.' He said, 'I cannot suggest any language that would be an improvement on the bill as it is drawn in that respect.' Afterwards I myself, fearing the Minister of Justice might make some further objection to the bill in that regard, drafted a clause and submitted it to him, and I have it here as I submitted it to him, and as he, in his own writing, amended it in order, as he thought, to fit the case. I said, 'Will that amendment fit the bill as you have changed it, and exempt the private bettor?' He said, 'I think it will.' What I contend is that he advised me in one way when I consulted him, and advised the House in another way," he said.

Mr. Aylesworth left his seat and walked out. Mr. Miller followed him and they had a conference in the Minister's private office.

Third readings were given the following bills in the House last night: Incorporating the Morrisburg Ferry & Dock Co.; incorporating the Ottawa, Rideau Valley and Brockville Railway; respecting the Dominion Bank; respecting the Smith's Falls & Ottawa Railway Co.

During question time Mr. Girard asked if the Government was aware that, since the retirement of Col. Wurtele of the 18th Regiment (Chicoutimi, Que.), the pay lists of the various regimental camps which have been held, it is alleged, have been covered with false names of persons who were never at the camps. The Minister of Militia said that the Department had no knowledge of it.

Mr. Crosby asked if it was true that Justice Britton had acted as a director of the National Trust Co. of Toronto. Mr. Aylesworth said that the Department of Justice had not been so informed, but Justice Britton would be communicated with.

The Finance Department issued last night a memorandum on the proposed changes in the Canadian customs tariff as the result of the new agreement with the United States.

"For the year ended March 31, 1909, the value of the articles on which reduction are proposed were: From the United States, $46,142,283; from other countries under general tariff, $8,015,507; less: imports from countries to which the reduced rates apply under the French treaty, $1,615,335; amount of imports affected by the proposed reduction in duties, $6,400,172; estimated amount of reduction in duties on goods from all countries, $263,149.

The estimated amount of reduction in revenue on goods imported from the United States is $192,814. The revenue on the proposed tariff will be $927,861, as against $1,120,675 collected in 1908-09.

Toronto met with two reverses in the House yesterday, when despite the valiant opposition of A. C. Macdonnell (South Toronto), the bills to incorporate the Hamilton, Waterloo & Guelph and the Toronto & Eastern Radial Railway Companies were squeezed through to stand for third readings.

There was some lively repartee in connection with the Toronto & Eastern bill, and Col. Sam Hughes made some "smart" references to Toronto's aldermen. When the bill was taken up, Major Currie objected to it being proceeded with in the absence of its sponsor, Mr. Fowke, Liberal member for South Ontario. Hon. Mr. Graham said there was no reason why the bill should not be proceeded with.

Major Currie said he would let all bills which were contentious go to the bottom of the order paper. It was high time the British practice of making members ballot for their places on the order paper at the opening of the session.

Major Currie and Mr. T. W. Crothers argued further against the bill on the question of jurisdiction, but the discussion stopped abruptly at 9.45.

There are 76,000 farmers' automobiles in the United States.

BUDGET IS NOT SECURE

Action of Irishmen Once More Imperils the Measure—Financial Bill Next Week.

London, April 12.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The political topic of the moment is Wm. O'Brien's bombshell as to the Government's offers of concessions for the Irish vote. O'Brien describes Lloyd-George's denial as astounding and will make a statement in the Commons either to-day or to-morrow.

Redmond supports the Chancellor, and says O'Brien's statement is a fable, but the situation is rendered much more difficult for the Cabinet. Quarrels between the Redmondites and Independents regarding which has applied hardest squeeze are certain to endanger the Government, whatever the result may be to the Irish parties. The budget, which was thought to be safe, is coming up next week. It will now be awkward for Redmond to support the Government in all the stages. There is, however, much irritation among the Ministerialists against the Irishmen Asquith's declaration last night that the bill founded on the veto resolutions will contain in the preamble a declaration about a reformed second chamber, does not please the Laborites and the more extreme radicals.

Remounts for British Army.

Winnipeg, April 12.—Major-General Benson is in the city on a mission for the War Office, and will proceed almost immediately west, where he will buy remounts for the British army.

THIS is a sentence used by a native on the mission station at Lokoja, West Africa. It means "I like best that green medicine," and the "green medicine" was Zam-Buk. The poor native had been suffering for months with a terribly ulcerated leg. Every remedy the missionary could try had been tried in vain; and until the arrival of Zam-Buk, the native had to go on suffering. When Zam-Buk arrived, the sore was treated, and in a few days began to heal. Zam-Buk finally worked a complete cure, and the missionary communicated with the proprietors, and told them of the incident, quoting the native's own words.

PROOFS OF ZAM-BUK'S HEALING POWERS.

Mrs. S. Crooks, of 468 Pacific Ave., Winnipeg, says:—"A year ago I contracted eczema, which spread over my neck and ears. Doctor's lotions and ointments were given a fair trial, yet I found no relief until Zam Buk was used. The pain and irritation were acute, and it was quite impossible to turn my head the least when the disease was at its worst, on account of the soreness and stiffness. "Zam-Buk, after several applications, relieved all this stiffness and soreness; banished the pains, and gradually healed the sores. A month ago I was also cured of a bad attack of bleeding piles through the efficacy of Zam-Buk. Part of a box was all that was necessary to relieve and permanently cure. I would advise others, who suffer in like manner, to try Zam-Buk."

BAD BURNS AND RINGWORM HEALED.

Mrs. Lewis Best, Carlisle P.O., says:—"My little daughter fell against the stove and burned her forehead very badly. The burn was about the size of a 50c piece and was very deep. It made the child's eye swell until it was almost shut, and then she got cold in the sore. It began to run matter very badly, and I could not stop it, although I bathed it well night and morning. At last I sent for some Zam-Buk, and one application at once put the discharge. I continued with the balm, and it very quickly healed the burn. Indeed, I have never seen a burn heal so quickly, and I am sure I shall always keep a box of Zam-Buk on hand in case of emergencies."

Mrs. W. G. Evans, of McLean, Sask., writes:—"My two little daughters had ringworm badly, around their eyes and on their hands. We tried several kinds of ointments, which did very little good. Finally, we procured a box of Zam-Buk, and after using it for about two weeks, the ringworm was entirely healed."

Miss Winnie Bennett, Coxes Creek, N.B., says:—"I suffered from a form of eczema on my hands. My fingers had great cracks in them, and although I tried various preparations, I could get nothing to heal them. I heard of Zam-Buk and obtained a supply. I was more than pleased with the first lot, and a little perseverance resulted in a complete cure."

Case after case could be quoted in which Zam-Buk has brought health and healing when all else failed. It is a sure cure for ulcers, eczema, rashes, ringworm, acne, itch, hives, salt rheum, burns, scalds, cuts, bruises, and all skin injuries and diseases. Also for piles. Druggists and stores everywhere at 50c box or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Before worthless imitations, a 25c. trial box offered for 1c. stamp to pay return postage and this advertisement and a dainty free trial box of Zam-Buk will be mailed you by return mail.

AN EXPLOSION YET TO COME

The Examiner refers to the Lumsden charges of over-classification on the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway as an exploded scandal. It may be found that the explosion is yet to come, and that when it does come the Liberal party will be completely shattered. It sometimes takes a long time for Canadian public indignation against political corruption to find vent, but when the explosion comes it completely wrecks the guilty party. Hon. Mr. Mercier seemed to be the idol of the French-Canadians. As Premier of Quebec he had a very large majority and it was generally supposed that he would remain in power for life, but when the people of Quebec Province discovered that contractors were being paid exorbitant prices by the Government in consideration of making large contributions to the Liberal campaign fund the Mercier Government was swept from power by an over-whelming vote of the French-Canadian people. The people of Ontario showed a similar desire to punish corruption when they wiped out the Ross government and nearly the whole Liberal representation in the Ontario Legislature. The day of reckoning for the Laurier government will come.

The history of this scandal may be briefly summarized as follows:

1. A quarrel arises in the Liberal party of Quebec, serious charges being made against Premier Parent by his colleagues. The whole Liberal party in Quebec Province is threatened with disruption. Sir Wilfrid Laurier settles the difficulty by appointing Mr. Parent to the position of chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway Construction Commission, thus entrusting him with the building of the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

2. Time goes on; the construction of the railway drags slowly and when the work is less than half completed the cost is found to have greatly exceeded the estimates for the whole work.

3. Major A. E. Hodgins, C.E., District Engineer on one of the Government sections of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, a Liberal and son of a Liberal, resigns, charging that enormous sums of Government money are being wasted as a result of over-classification, contractors being paid for clay excavation at rock prices. A Parliamentary committee is appointed to investigate. The Liberal members of the committee do their utmost to block investigation. Finally Major Hodgins gets tired. His time is valuable; he wants to get away to attend to his own business; and the Liberals persuade him to withdraw his charges on condition that the whole question of over-classification shall be investigated by a joint commission appointed by the Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

4. Hugh D. Lumsden, chief engineer on the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, a Liberal in politics, resigned his position on the ground that over-classification of which he could not approve was going on all along the line.

5. Sir Wilfrid Laurier agrees that a Parliamentary commission shall be appointed to investigate but insists that this enquiry shall be restricted to charges made against subordinate engineers. He refuses a broad investigation, which might show the guilt of the commissioners.

5. A Liberal lawyer is appointed by the Government at the public expense to defend the National Transcontinental Railway Commission before this committee. A Liberal lawyer is appointed to prosecute. The Conservatives on the committee take the ground that as the Government is on trial it should not be allowed to appoint both the counsel for the defence and the counsel for the prosecution. They propose that the Conservative members on the committee be allowed to suggest the name of a counsel for the prosecution with the understanding that the lawyer chosen shall be acceptable also to the Liberal majority on the committee. The Liberal members refuse to agree to this, and consequently the Conservative members withdrew from the committee, saying that the enquiry is a farce.

6. The enquiry goes on in a restricted way, but nevertheless it is proven that all along the line of the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway clay is being classified as rock and that contractors are being paid for excavating clay at rock prices. The Review has already given a number of examples of the enormous increase in cost that results from pretending that clay is rock.

WHY PRICES ARE HIGH

The agitation in the United States in favor of lowering the protective tariff is due almost entirely to the rise in prices, which began just about the time the McKinley tariff was adopted, and many Americans imagine that the tariff caused the high prices. The customs tariff of Canada was lowered about the same time that the United States tariff was raised, and everyone knows that there has been a steady increase in prices in Canada ever since.

When Canadian Liberal newspapers blame the United States tariff for the high prices that prevail across the border they should attribute the increased prices in Canada to the lowering of the Canadian customs tariff by the Laurier Government.

But in fact the rise in prices in both countries is due to some other cause than the tariff. If we look to other countries for an explanation we find the same complaint of rising prices. The Government of Austria has just appointed a commission to study the cause of high prices in that country.

In Germany the people quietly endured the rise in prices of almost all commodities until the price of beer went up. That was too much for a German to bear, and a cable dispatch announces that a movement to boycott beer has been inaugurated. It is to be feared that the beer boycott will be of shorter duration in Germany than the beef boycott was in the United States.

The real cause of the increase in prices in the United States, Canada, England, Germany, Austria, and other countries is the greatly increased production of gold. Gold being the standard of value never changes in price nominally, but the quantity of other things a given quantity of gold will buy changes. The more plentiful gold becomes the less of other things it will buy. So when gold is plentiful prices of things in general are high. When gold is scarce prices of things in general are low.

EDITORIAL NOTES

In yesterday's Review a portion of an editorial relating to high prices in the United States was published, but by a mistake the greater part of the editorial did not appear. The editorial is published in full in this issue.

A report issued by the Canadian Department of the Interior shows that out of a total area of 331,894,320 acres in the prarie provinces of Canada, the surveyed area is now 145,249,985 acres, and that the total area under cultivation last year was only 11,960,000 acres, of which the area under wheat was 6,878,000 acres. Imagine what the wheat crop will be when all the agricultural land in this vast area is under cultivation.

The fact that an Ottawa woman was so stout that when her house took fire the firemen could not get her out of the window will be much commented upon by those who who read the telegraphic dispatches, but the bravery of her daughter, who refused to leave her is a matter more worthy of note. The self-sacrificing courage of this French-Canadian woman stands out in strong contrast to the cowardice of the Russian men on board the British steamship Cairnrona, who fought wildly to get into the life boats before the women. Fortunately both of the French-Canadian women escaped without injury. History records many instances of the courage of French-Canadian women.

FRANK HILL

Frank Hill, April 11.—Owing to the very heavy snow storm this morning the farmers had to stop working on the lands.

Mr. Arthur Franks has everything in readiness for the erection of his new house. He expects the mason to build the cellar wall shortly.

Miss Annie Lowes, in company with Mr. W. Lowes, spent Sunday visiting friends west of East Emily cheese factory.

Mr. Robt. Adams has delivered to Mr. John O. Lowes a very fine new Massey-Harris disc seeder.

Mr. John Davis, who has been busy the past couple of weeks trapping, is to be congratulated on his large catch of muskrats. They are worth in the neighborhood of 85 cents, so Mr. Davis has made excellent wages.

Miss Terey Beate and Miss Pearl Franks are selling tickets for the shredded wheat banquet, which will be held under the auspices of the Girls' Guild at Christ Church, Omemee, on Thursday, April 28th. This will be a good concert and a large number of the young people of Frank Hill should be present.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Ruth, of Peterborough, are at present visiting Mrs. Ruth's sister, Mrs. Harry Lowes.

The young men are ready to start catching suckers, which will be very plentiful in a week or two.

Mr. Wilbert and Mr. Milburn Clark were visitors to Bethel church Sunday night.

Miss Eva Mills was the guest of Mr. Harold McDougall, Sunday last.

PRODUCED AN ECLIPSE.

The Persian Astronomers Were More Diplomatic Than the English.

Official Chinese astronomers sometimes get their heads cut off for not correctly foretelling an eclipse. Illustrating this, I am told by my friend, the astronomer royal, of a visit paid about thirty years ago to the observatory in Greenwich park by the shah of Persia of that date. The shah made a great point of visiting the British state observatory in company with King Edward, who was then the Prince of Wales.

Sir George Airey was the astronomer royal and showed the party over the building and gave them peeps through telescopes. "Now, show me an eclipse of the sun," said the shah, speaking in French. Sir George pretended not to hear and led the way to another instrument. "Dog of an astronomer," said the shah, "produce me an eclipse!" Sir George politely said he had not got one and could not oblige the king of kings. "Ho, ho!" said the shah, turning in great indignation to the Prince of Wales. "You hear; cut his head off!" Sir George's life was, as a matter of fact, spared, but in the course of a year he retired and was succeeded by the present astronomer royal.

On his appointment that gentleman was astonished at receiving a letter of congratulation from the shah of Persia. The shah evidently thought that his request had been attended to, though with some delay. He proceeded to tell the new astronomer royal that he had a few days before writing witnessed a total eclipse of the sun in the observatory at Teheran. This was perfectly correct, but the suggestion seemed to be that the Teheran astronomers knew their business and had the good sense to arrange an eclipse when a royal visitor wished for one and so escape decapitation.—Sir Ray Lankester in London Telegraph.

James the Great.

The educated chimpanzee known as James the Great is at present one of the sensations of the vaudeville stage in Europe. A man who saw him perform in Germany writes: "The animal does all sorts of tricks under the direction of his master and at one time occupies the stage all alone, and then he becomes the most interesting. He wears long black trousers, a green pea jacket and a light felt hat of alpine shape. The monkey makes his bow and advances to the wings, where he receives from an attendant a bicycle, which he mounts and rides around the stage at all speeds from the very slow to racing time and seems to enjoy it. Then he does some fancy riding and closes by wheeling in and out among a dozen champagne bottles, coming dangerously close to some of them, but hitting none. He is a wonderful example of the trainer's patience and the monkey's adaptability."

In Deepest Despair — All Run Down—Health Was Restored.

When you are sick and undecided is to the best remedy to use, there is nothing so convincing as the personal experience of some one who has suffered like yourself.

From St. Francis, Maine, comes the following statement from Mrs. Ovila Daigle: "I want to write you a few lines in order to tell you how much better my health is since taking Ferrozone.

"For two years I was weak.
"Couldn't do any housework.
"Was tired, worn out, depressed.
"Thought I wouldn't recover.
"Since using Ferrozone I have grown strong enough to attend myself to the family washing. I have seven children and a husband, and am doing all the housework myself. I still use Ferrozone, and seem to gain better health all the time."
